

Leaving and Returning

The Gemora inquires: When the Mishna states, 'One cannot place' (cooked food on a kirah that was heated with marc or wood, unless the coals are removed or ash sprinkled on them), does that mean that one must not return it (chazarah), yet it is permitted to keep it there (she'hiyah) even if it (the stove) is neither swept nor covered with ashes; and which Tanna would the Mishna be following? Chananyah! For it was taught in a braisa: Chananyah said: Whatever is (cooked) as the food of 'ben Derusai' (a bandit, who would eat his food when it was only one-third cooked) may be kept on the stove, even if it is neither swept nor covered with ashes? Or perhaps, the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to keeping it there, and that is permitted only if it is swept or covered with ashes, but not otherwise; and how much more so (that it is forbidden) with respect of returning it.

The Gemora attempts to prove this from the words of the Mishna, for two clauses are taught in our Mishna: [When the coals are removed or covered] Beis Shammai maintain that one may only place hot water on the kirah but not cooked food. Beis Hillel, however, permits placing hot water and cooked food on a kirah (whose coals are removed or covered). Beis Shammai permits one to remove something from a kirah on Shabbos, but he forbids placing the pot back on it, and Beis Hillel permits it. Now, if you say that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to keeping it there, it is well, for this is what the Tanna is teaching: If a kirah was heated with straw and stubble, one may leave a cooked food on it (before the commencement of Shabbos); with marc or wood, one may not leave a cooked food on it unless it is shoveled or ash was sprinkled on it. And what (kinds of food) may be left there? Beis Shammai maintain that one may only leave hot water there, but not cooked food, whereas, Beis Hillel, however, permits leaving hot water and cooked food there. And just as they differ in respect to leaving it there (from before Shabbos), so do they differ in respect to returning it, where Beis Shammai permits one to remove something from a kirah on Shabbos, but he forbids returning it, and Beis Hillel permits it (even returning). But if you say that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to returning it, then this is what the Tanna is teaching: If a kirah was heated with straw and stubble, one may return a cooked pot (that had been removed) to it; with marc or wood, one may not return a cooked pot to it, unless it is shoveled or ash was sprinkled on it. And what (kinds of food) may he return? Beis Shammai maintain that one may only return hot water there, but not cooked food, whereas, Beis Hillel, however, permits returning hot water and cooked food there. Now, the last clause states: Beis Shammai permits one to remove something from a kirah on Shabbos, but he forbids returning it, and Beis Hillel permits it (even returning). Then what is the necessity of this addition (seeing that it has already been stated in the previous clause)? [This would prove that the first interpretation is the correct one; the Mishna means 'leaving it there,' and it reflects the opinion of Chananyah!]

The Gemora disagrees with the proof: After all, I can tell you that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to returning it (and with respect to your question that the last clause is superfluous, I will answer you the following:), and it is as if there are missing words in the Mishna, and this is what the Tanna is teaching us: If a kirah was heated with straw and stubble, one may return a cooked pot (that had been removed) to it; with marc or wood, one may not return a cooked pot to it, unless it is shoveled or ash was sprinkled on it; but as for leaving food there, that is permitted even if it is neither swept nor covered with ashes. And (regarding that unspoken clause) what may be left there? Beis Shammai maintain that one may only leave hot water there, but not cooked food, whereas, Beis Hillel, however, permits leaving hot water and cooked food there. And as to this returning, of which I told you (in the first clause), it is not a unanimous ruling, but the subject of a disagreement between Beis Shammai and Beis Hillel, for Beis Shammai permits one to remove something from a kirah on Shabbos, but he forbids returning it, and Beis Hillel permits it (even returning).

The Gemora attempts to resolve this from the following: Rabbi Chelbo said in the name of Rav Chama bar Gurya who said in the name of Rav: We learned this (lenient ruling of the Mishna) only of the top of the kirah (which is only somewhat hot), but within it (which is very hot) is forbidden. Now, if you say that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to returning it (and then the unspoken clause of the Mishna stated regarding leaving food there, that is permitted even if it is neither swept nor covered with ashes), it is well, hence there is a difference between the inside and the top (for it will be forbidden to put the food inside the kirah with coals, for this will transgress the prohibition of insulating (hatmanah) with coals). But if you say that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to keeping it there (and it is only permitted if it was shoveled or ash was placed on it), what difference would it make whether it is inside or on top (for if there are no coals, why should it be forbidden to put the food inside; there are no coals there)? [Evidently, R' Chelbo understood the Mishna do be referring to returning it (chazarah), yet it is permitted to keep it there (she'hiyah); and the Mishna would be following the opinion of Chananyah.]

The Gemora disagrees with the proof: Do you think that Rabbi Chelbo refers to the first clause? He refers to the last one: Beis Hillel permits even returning. Upon that, Rabbi Chelbo said in the name of Rav Chama bar Gurya who said in the name of Rav: We learned this (lenient ruling of the Mishna) only of the top of the kirah (which is only somewhat hot), but within it (which is very hot) is forbidden (for it has the appearance of cooking).

The Gemora attempts to resolve this from the following braisa: If two stoves (kirahs) that are joined (sharing a common wall), one was shoveled or covered with ashes, while the other is not, we may (before Shabbos) leave food upon the one that is shoveled or covered with ashes, but not upon the one that is not shoveled or covered with ashes. And what may be left there? Beis Shammai maintain: Nothing at all; while Beis Hillel rule: Hot water, but not a cooked dish. If one removes it, all agree that he must not return it; these are the words of Rabbi Meir. Rabbi Yehudah said: Beis Shammai maintain: Hot water, but not a cooked dish; while Beis Hillel rule: Both hot water and a dish. Beis Shammai maintain: We may remove food from the kirah, but not return it; while Beis Hillel rule: We may return it too.

Now, if you say that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to keeping it there, it is well, for then our Mishna agrees with Rabbi Yehudah. But if you say that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to returning it, who is the authority of our Mishna? It is neither Rabbi Yehudah nor Rabbi Meir! For if Rabbi Meir, there is a difficulty on Beis Shammai's view in one respect (for in the Mishna they permit the leaving of hot water on a kirah from before Shabbos even if the coals are uncovered, while here it is stated that even if it is swept, nothing may be kept there), and on Beis Hillel's in two (for in the Mishna they permit the leaving of hot water and cooked food on a kirah from before Shabbos even if the coals are uncovered, while here it is stated that it is permitted only if the coals have been removed and only by hot water, and with regard to returning as well, for in the Mishna Beis Hillel is cited as an opinion that permits returning, and here they say that it is forbidden)? And if it is Rabbi Yehudah, the law (of permitting she'hiyah – leaving on the stove) of the coals to be removed or covered with ashes is difficult (for in the Mishna, they argue if she'hiyah is permitted for hot water and cooked food if the coals are uncovered, and here R' Yehudah is referring to covered coals, and it is agreed upon that it would be forbidden if the coals are uncovered)?

The Gemora answers: After all, I can tell you that the Mishna (when it states 'one cannot place,' it) is referring to returning it, but our Tanna agrees with Rabbi Yehudah in one respect and disagrees with him in another. He agrees with Rabbi Yehudah in one respect, viz., in respect to hot water and a cooked dish, and removing and returning them, but he disagrees with him in another, for whereas our Tanna holds that leaving them there (from before Shabbos) is permitted even if it is neither shoveled nor covered with ashes, Rabbi Yehudah maintains that it is permitted only if it is shoveled or covered with ashes, but not otherwise.

One may place a food next to a kirah that was heated with sesame pulp or wood.

The Gemora posed a question regarding a kirah whose coals were not removed or covered. Can one place food next to the wall of a kirah?

The Gemora concludes that one may place food that next to a kirah that was heated with sesame pulp or wood, but one may only keep food on top of the kirah if the coals were covered or removed. If the coals die out or were covered with fine chaff or flax, the kirah is akin to a kirah covered with ash.

One may leave cooked food before Shabbos on a kirah that the coals were removed and then the fire was reignited.

When one removes the coals from the kirah, he signifies that he does not want the food to continue being cooked. Although the fire reignited, we do not say that the kirah reverts to its original status where the coals were not removed and one would not be allowed to leave food on the kirah. Rather, we say that he will not come to stoke the embers, as he prefers that the coals be removed or covered.

One may leave cooked food before Shabbos on a kirah whose coals were removed and then the fire reignited, even if the coals were of rosem wood that are very hot.

Rosem coals are unique that they are very hot and are not easily extinguished. If one covered the rosem coals and then they were reignited, we still say that one is permitted to leave cooked water and cooked food on the kirah before Shabbos, even though the coals were reignited.

There is a dispute regarding leaving cooked food on a kirah whose coals were not removed if the food improves as it condenses.

Rav and Shmuel maintain that food that improves when it condenses is forbidden to leave on a kirah whose coals were not covered or removed. Rabbi Yochanan, however, maintains that one may leave cooked water and fully cooked food on a kirah whose coals were not removed or covered. This applies even when the food improves as it condenses.

Rav Yehudah was allowed to leave food before Shabbos on a kirah whose coals were not removed.

Rav Yehudah would always leave food on a kirah whose coals were not covered or removed, because Rav Yehudah suffered from bulmus, seizures, and he was required to eat sweet and healthy food to keep well. Rav Nachman Bar Yitzchak, who was exceptional in his actions, would leave food before Shabbos on a kirah whose coals were not covered or removed.

Any food that has flour is considered to get worse as it cooks longer, except for turnips whose taste improves even if it contains flour.

One may not leave food that improves when it condenses on a kirah whose coals have not been covered or removed, but if the food gets bourse as it condenses, one may leave it on the kirah whose coals have not been covered or removed. The rule to follow is that food made with flour gets worse as it condenses, but turnips, although they are made with flour, improve as it condenses. Even regarding the turnips, they only improve if they are prepared with meat, but if they are not prepared with meat, they get worse as they condense. Even with meat, however, they only improve as they condense when not served to guests. When one serves the food to guests, however, we render the food as getting worse, because one prefers to serve guests pieces that are large and have not condensed.

People tend to serve guests large pieces of meat that do not condense.

One serves guests pieces of meat that have not condensed and are large as one wishes to honor his guests, and it is not respectful to serve guests meat that has condensed, as the meat is not as discernible. (36b - 37b)

INSIGHTS TO THE DAF

Placing Food Inside an Oven Nowadays

The Gemora states that one may only return food to the top of a kirah, but to place food back inside the kirah is forbidden.

The Machatzis Hashekel writes that the reason for this prohibition is that we are concerned that one may come to stoke the embers, and this applies even when the coals have been covered or removed.

The Shevet Halevi, however, writes that the prohibition is because it appears like one is cooking on Shabbos.

Based on this premise, the Shevet HaLevi writes that with regard to modern day ovens that run on Shabbos mode, one would be allowed to return cooked food inside the oven.

The rationale behind this ruling is that the Ohr Zarua posits that the only prohibition of chazara, returning the pot to the fire on Shabbos, is when the oven has an interior and a back. In such a case, when one places the cooked food inside the oven and not on top of the oven, it appears like cooking on Shabbos. Concerning our ovens, however, that has an interior but do not have a back, there is no concern that it will appear like cooking on Shabbos.

One can also add the opinion of the Rama who permits returning the food to the interior of the oven when the food was removed on Shabbos.

Reb Moshe Feinstein in Iggros Moshe, however, writes that one should not return a pot of food even to a modern day oven.
