Challenge and Answer

[It was taught: What is the law if someone makes a vow of nezirus when they are in a cemetery? Rabbi Yochanan says: The nezirus is effective. Rish Lakish says: The nezirus is ineffective. Rabbi Yochanan understands that the nezirus waits to take effect until he leaves the cemetery, at which time it becomes effective. Rish Lakish counters that it only is valid if he makes this vow after he leaves the cemetery.]

Rabbi Yochanan asked Rish Lakish from the following braisa: If a person was tamei and he declared a vow of nezirus, he is forbidden from cutting his hair, from drinking wine and from becoming tamei from a corpse. If he cuts his hair, or drinks wine, or becomes tamei from a corpse, he incurs forty lashes. According to you (Rish Lakish), who holds that such a nezirus is ineffective, why does he incur lashes?

Rish Lakish answers: The braisa is referring to a case where he became tahor (after his initial vow, which was ineffective), and then he became tamei again (after reconfirming his nezirus vow; the novelty is that he is not required to state, “I am hereby a nazir”; rather, it is sufficient if he says, “I want the nezirus to take effect now”). (16b2 – 17a1)

Successful Challenge

Rabbi Yochanan asked Rish Lakish from the following braisa: There is no difference between a tamei person who declared nezirus and a nazir tahor who became tamei except that a tamei person who declared nezirus, his seventh day counts towards his nezirus count (after he has completed his purification process, he may begin to count nezirus and the remainder of that day counts towards his term of nezirus), however, a nazir tahor that became tamei, his seventh day does not count towards his nezirus count (like we learned in the previous Mishna; he cannot resume his nezirus until after he brings the korbanos on the eighth day). According to you (Rish Lakish), who holds that such a nezirus is ineffective, why does the seventh day count towards his nezirus count? (17a1)

New Interpretation of their Dispute

[A revised interpretation of the dispute] Mar bar Rav Ashi said: Everyone agrees that the nezirus takes effect immediately. The argument is whether he incurs lashes for becoming tamei (he was warned to leave the cemetery and he did not do so). Rabbi Yochanan maintains that since the nezirus took effect, he will receive lashes if he becomes tamei (just like he would receive lashes for violating the other nezirus prohibitions). Rish Lakish, however, holds that he does not receive lashes even though the nezirus takes effect (just like he is not liable to bring the special korbanos that a nazir who becomes tamei brings).

Rabbi Yochanan asked Rish Lakish from our Mishna: If a person proclaimed that he is a nazir when he happened to be in a cemetery, even if he stayed there for thirty days, those days do not count towards his vow. Additionally, he does not bring a korban for breaking his vow by being in the cemetery when he made the vow. It would seem from this ruling that he does not bring the tumah korbanos, but he would receive lashes for it!

Rish Lakish answers: The Mishna could have said that he does not receive lashes for it. Since the Mishna wanted to teach the latter portion of the Mishna, which said: If he left the cemetery after making the vow and then went in again, the days he kept are counted and he must bring a korban for becoming tamei, the Mishna, therefore, said in the first portion that he does not bring the korbanos for becoming tamei.

The Gemora cites a braisa which supports Rabbi Yochanan: There is no difference between a tamei person who declared nezirus and a nazir tahor who became tamei except that a tamei person who declared nezirus, his seventh day counts towards his nezirus count (after he has completed his purification process, he may begin to count nezirus and the remainder of that day counts towards his term of nezirus), however, a nazir tahor that became tamei, his seventh day does not count towards his nezirus count (like we learned in the previous Mishna; he cannot resume his nezirus until after he brings the korbanos on the eighth day). It would seem that regarding lashes, there is no difference between them!

Rish Lakish responds: No! It is with respect to haircutting (either to receive lashes for violating this prohibition or for the mitzvah of shaving his head on the seventh day) that they are the same.

The Gemora counters: If so (that there is a difference regarding lashes for tumah), why didn't the braisa mention that difference as well?

The Gemora replies: The braisa is discussing the time for his nezirus to begin; it is not interested in dealing with the violations of the nezirus. (17a1 – 17a2)

Successful Challenge

The Gemora asks on Rish Lakish from the following braisa: If a person was tamei and he declared a vow of nezirus, he is forbidden from cutting his hair, from drinking wine and from becoming tamei from a corpse. If he cuts his hair, or drinks wine, or becomes tamei from a corpse, he incurs forty lashes. (It is clearly evident that he does receive lashes for becoming tamei!)

The Gemora concludes: This is indeed a refutation of Rish Lakish's opinion. (17a2)

Loitering

Rava inquires: What is the law if a nazir is in a cemetery? Is there a certain amount of time that he needs to be there in order to receive lashes (one who became tamei in the Beis Hamikdosh and lingered there for the amount of time it would take for a person to prostrate himself is liable; is there a defined time for the nazir as well?)

The Gemora analyzes the case: If he is speaking about a case where he declared the vow while he was in the cemetery, and people warned him before his vow, “Do not utter this vow,” why would loitering be necessary? A nazir who enters a cemetery is punished without lingering because he was warned against entering (and he refused to listen); so too, here, he was warned (and he intentionally went against it)!

Rather, the case of Rava’s inquiry is as follows: The nazir went into the cemetery inside a carriage, chest or closet and a fellow came along and removed the floor from under him (rendering the person inside the box tamei). Do we say that the rule requiring a certain length of stay is only inside the Beis Hamikdosh, but not for outside (like nezirus), or perhaps there is no difference?

The Gemora leaves the question unresolved. (17a2 – 17b1)

Rav Ashi’s Inquiry

Rav Ashi inquires: If one declared to be a nazir in a cemetery, does he require a head-shaving (on the seventh day of his purification process) or not (in the same manner that he does not require to bring the korbanos)? Perhaps only a nazir tahor that became tamei requires a head-shaving, but not for a tamei person who became a nazir, or perhaps, there is no difference?

The Gemora attempts to resolve this from our Mishna: If a person proclaimed that he is a nazir when he happened to be in a cemetery, even if he stayed there for thirty days, those days do not count towards his vow. Additionally, he does not bring a korban for breaking his vow by being in the cemetery when he made the vow. This implies that although he does not bring a korban for being tamei, he does require head-shaving!

The Gemora deflects the proof: The Mishna is providing the reason that he does not bring the korbanos, and that it because he does not require a head-shaving (and the korbanos are dependent upon the head-shaving).

The Gemora attempts to resolve this from a braisa: There is no difference between a tamei person who declared nezirus and a nazir tahor who became tamei except that a tamei person who declared nezirus, his seventh day counts towards his nezirus count (after he has completed his purification process, he may begin to count nezirus and the remainder of that day counts towards his term of nezirus), however, a nazir tahor that became tamei, his seventh day does not count towards his nezirus count (like we learned in the previous Mishna; he cannot resume his nezirus until after he brings the korbanos on the eighth day). It would seem that regarding head-shaving, there is no difference between them!

The Gemora deflects the proof: We can only infer from the braisa that they are the same regarding lashes (for becoming tamei).

The Gemora counters: But if there is a difference regarding head-shaving, why didn't the braisa mention that difference as well?

The Gemora answers: When the braisa says "his seventh day," it is referring to all of its halachos (including the head-shaving). (17b1 – 17b2)

INSIGHTS TO THE DAF

Lashes without an Action

Rava inquires: What is the law if a nazir is in a cemetery? Is there a certain amount of time that he needs to be there in order to receive lashes (one who became tamei in the Beis Hamikdosh and lingered there for the amount of time it would take for a person to prostrate himself is liable; is there a defined time for the nazir as well)?

The Gemora analyzes the case: If he is speaking about a case where he declared the vow while he was in the cemetery, and people warned him before his vow, "Do not utter this vow," why would loitering be necessary? A nazir who enters a cemetery is punished without lingering because he was warned against entering (and he refused to listen); so too, here, he was warned (and he intentionally went against it)!

Tosfos asks: Shouldn't this be regarded as a violation without performing an action? Why would he receive lashes for declaring himself to be a nazir?

Tosfos in Shavuos writes that the Gemora is in accordance with the opinions that maintain that one can receive lashes even without committing an action.

Tosfos here answers: Although he cannot receive lashes for the acceptance of the nezirus while inside the cemetery (for that does not entail an action), he will receive the lashes for continuing to remain in the cemetery after the acceptance of nezirus. That does constitute an action.

The Steipler Gaon asks: Where is the action? Why is the fact that he refused to leave regarded as an action?

He explains: Anytime an action is performed through a person, and he has the ability to eliminate it, but willingly refrains from doing so, this is considered as if he has committed an action, even though it happened by itself. The fact that the nazir is standing in the cemetery refusing to leave, that constitutes an action.

The Mishna Lamelech explains Tosfos differently: Tosfos maintains that although the transgression was committed without an action, he may receive lashes for the entering into the cemetery. Although no violation occurred at that time (since he was not yet a nazir), he receives lashes, since that was the action that led to the transgression.

DAILY MASHAL

Sheets Flapping in the Wind

Over ninety years ago in the small town of Shavil, Lithuania, a woman was walking home and noticed that her neighbor had hung out two large sheets to dry. This was the norm for the day, but this lady was having a bad day. The sheets were flapping in the wind, and she would have to go a few feet out of her way to reach her apartment. This was unacceptable, especially in her current foul mood. In a burst of anger, she tore them off the clothesline and threw them onto the muddy ground. She did all of this under the watchful and shocked eye of the laundry's owner. Instead of reacting to this outrageous act, she quietly picked up her muddy sheets, washed them again and hung them up to dry. A few days later, the son of the lady who had tossed the laundry suddenly became seriously ill. A devout woman, she understood that nothing in this world just happens, there had to be a reason. She went to a tzaddik, righteous man known as the Leshem, Horav Shlomo, zl, known for his classic work, Leshem Shevo V'achlama, and cried hysterically, begging for a blessing for her son. "I have done nothing wrong. Why would my son become so ill?" she cried. The Leshem calmed her down, but said, "You must think. Nothing happens in a vacuum. You must have done something to warrant this Heavenly response." She then remembered the two sheets flapping in the wind and her irresponsible reaction. "Do you know whose sheets they were?" he asked. "Yes," she replied. "Then you must go and ask forgiveness before Hashem can forgive you," the Rav said. The lady immediately went to the home of the woman whose sheets she had soiled and, when the husband answered the door, she asked to see his wife. "I must speak to your wife immediately," she said. "I must apologize to her for something terrible I did to her." The husband said, "First of all, my wife is not in. I cannot believe, however, that you did anything to offend her, because she did not mention anything to me about it." This was not enough to dissuade the woman, who burst into tears as she related to him what she had done. The husband once again told the woman, "You must have the wrong house. My wife never said a word to me about any sheets. You have no reason to apologize." The woman was confused and returned to the rav to relate her dialogue with the husband. "I know that family quite well. That woman is very righteous. She wanted to preserve your dignity and not tell anyone what you did - not even her husband. She has had numerous miscarriages. I gave her a brachah, blessing, that Hashem should grant her a child that will illuminate the hearts and minds of the Jewish People." A short while later, the rav's blessing was fulfilled when the woman gave birth to a little boy. She named him Yosef Shalom. Yes, the venerable gadol hador, pre-eminent Torah leader of our generation, Horav Yosef Shalom Elyashiv, Shlita, was the product of that blessing - a blessing warranted because his mother preserved the dignity of a woman who had brought her grief. Humiliation, even when one might conjure up a reason to justify it, is still pain, and emotional pain hurts deeper than physical pain.
