Tumah of an Idol

The Gemora asks on Rabbah from a braisa: An idol is like a sheretz and its service utensils are like a sheretz. Rabbi Akiva said: An idol is like a niddah, and its service utensils are like a sheretz. [Seemingly, the Rabbis maintain that an idol is not subject to the tumah of carrying – just as a sheretz.] Now, according to Rabbi Elozar, it is well (for it is only R’ Aviva who maintains that an idol is subject to the tumah of carrying); but according to Rabbah’s view, there is a difficulty (for according to him, both the Rabbis and R’ Akiva agree that an idol is subject to the tumah of carrying)?

The Gemora answers: Rabbah can say to you: Is it stronger than the Mishna (mentioned on the previous Daf) which states: Its stones, wood, and earth cause tumah like a sheretz, and I explained that when it states ‘like a sheretz,’ it means that it does not render tamei through a ‘placed stone’ [‘Even mesama’ - a stone set up upon supports, and under it lay garments or utensils; the stone does not come into contact with these things. The issue is whether these utensils are rendered tamei when an idol is placed upon the stone.]; here too it means that it does not render tamei through a ‘placed stone.’

The Gemora asks on Rabbah from another braisa: An idolater, an idolatress, an idol and its service utensils, they themselves are tamei, but not their hesset (i.e., if they are carried by a tahor person, and that person did not come into actual contact with them, the person remains tahor; he is not rendered tamei through tumah by carrying). Rabbi Akiva maintained: They (are tamei) and their hesset (that which carries them is tamei). Now, according to Rabbi Elozar, it is well (for he maintains that the Rabbis and R’ Aviva dispute if an idol is subject to the tumah of carrying); but according to Rabbah’s view, there is a difficulty (for according to him, both the Rabbis and R’ Akiva agree that an idol is subject to the tumah of carrying)?

The Gemora answers: Rabbah can say to you: And even according to your view (is it any better); can you say of an idolater and an idolatress that they are tamei but not their hesset? Surely it was taught in a braisa: Speak to the Children of Israel and say to them: when a man has a discharge. A braisa taught that only the Children of Israel convey tumah by zivah and idolaters do not convey tumah by zivah, but a decree has been enacted against them that they should be regarded as zavim in all respects (even when they did not experience any discharge). [Accordingly, they should also be subject to the laws of tumah through carrying – the same way that a zav is!?]

Rather, Rabbah answers the difficulty according to his reasoning, as follows: An idolater and an idolatress - they themselves, their hesset, and their ‘placed stone’ are all tamei; an idol - it and its hesset are tamei, but not its ‘placed stone.’ Rabbi Akiva says: An idol - it, its hesset and its ‘placed stone’ are all tamei. Rabbi Elozar, however interprets it in accordance with his view: An idolater and an idolatress – they themselves, their hesset, and their ‘placed stone’ are all tamei; an idol - it is tamei, but not its hesset. Rabbi Akiva says: An idol - it and its hesset are tamei.

Rav Ashi asked on this explanation: If so, what is the meaning of 'they themselves'? [If 'hesset' means through carrying, what is meant by 'they'? It cannot mean that they themselves are tamei, since that is obvious from the fact that they generate tumah through being carried!]

Rather, said Rav Ashi: This is the meaning: In the case of an idolater and an idolatress, whether they carry others (what is known as tumas hesset) or others carry them (the regular tumas masa), these others are tamei. If an idol carries others, they are tahor (for the analogy between idols and sheretz excludes idols from the laws of hesset); if others carry it, they are tamei (through tumas masa, derived from the analogy between idols and niddah). As for its service utensils, whether they carry others or others carry them, these others are tahor. Rabbi Akiva said: In the case of an idolater and an idolatress (where there is an analogy to the tumah of a zav), and an idol (where there is an analogy to the tumah of a niddah), whether they carry others or others carry them, these others are tamei; as for its service utensils, whether they carry others or others carry them, they are tahor.

The Gemora asks: In the case of an idol, as for others carrying it, that is well, for it is possible; but how is it conceivable for it (an inanimate object) to carry others?

Rami the son of Rav Yeva said: It is as we learned in the following Mishna: If a zav is in one pan of the scales, and food or liquids are in the other pan, and the zav outweighs them, they are tamei (for the zav is supporting them; this is tumas hesset); if they outweigh him, they are tahor (for tumas midras – the tumah of couch and seat, only applies to objects which are designated to support the weight of a human; this excludes food and liquids; they also will not be tamei through masa, for a person that carries a zav will be tamei, not objects). [This teaching proves to us that tumas hesset is not only for carrying objects, but also for supporting them, and therefore, an idol, although incapable of 'carrying' something, for it is inanimate, it can in fact 'support' something.]

The Gemora asks: With whom does that which was taught in this braisa agree: As for all tamei things which carry others (e.g., through a scale), they (the things carried) are tahor, except in the case of hesset by a zav, for which no companion is found in the whole Torah. Shall we say that this is not according to Rabbi Akiva, for if it is in accordance with Rabbi Akiva, there is an idol as well?

The Gemora answers: You may even say that it agrees with Rabbi Akiva, for the braisa states zav and all that is similar to him (and since idols are analogous to a zav, they too can generate tumas hesset).

Rav Chama bar Gurya inquired: Does the law of (tumah from) an idol operate in respect of its limbs or not?

The Gemora elaborates: Now, where an unskilled person can reassemble it (the limb in the idol), there is no question, for it is as though it is already joined. When does the question arise? If an unskilled person cannot reassemble it, what then? Since an unskilled person cannot reassemble it, it is as if it is broken (and therefore cannot generate tumah), or perhaps, it is actually not diminished (and therefore, it can still generate tumah)?

The Gemora notes: There were some who put the inquiry in the reverse direction: Where an unskilled person cannot reassemble it, there is no question, for it is as if it was broken. When does the question apply? It is where an unskilled person can reassemble it; what then? Since an unskilled person can reassemble it, it is as though it is already joined; or perhaps, now it is nevertheless disjoined and dismantled? The Gemora leaves this question unresolved (as a teiku).

Rav Achadvoi bar Ami inquired: What of an idol less than an olive in size?

Rav Yosef asked: Regarding what law is he asking? Shall we say it is in respect of the prohibition (to benefit from an idol); let it be no more than Zevuv the idol of Ekron (which was smaller than the size of an olive, and nevertheless, it was forbidden for benefit), for it was taught in the following braisa: And they made Baal-beris their God; this refers to Zevuv the idol of Ekron. It teaches us that everyone made a likeness of that which he feared (Zevuv), and put it in his purse; whenever he thought of it, he took it out of his purse and embraced and kissed it!

Rather, the question is in respect of tumah; what is the law? Since it is analogous to sheretz, then just as sheretz generates tumah by the size of a lentil, so too an idol generates tumah by the size of a lentil; or perhaps it is also analogous to a corpse: just as a corpse generates tumah by the size of an olive, so too does an idol generate tumah by the size of an olive?

Rav Avya, and others state, Rabbah bar Ulla, said: Come and hear a proof from the following braisa: An idol less than an olive in size has no tumah at all, for it is written: And he (King Yoshiyahu) cast its dust (of the idol) upon the graves of the people (who worshipped it): just as a corpse generates tumah by the size of an olive, so too does an idol generate tumah by the size of an olive.

[The Gemora returns to R' Elozar's explanation of the Tannaic dispute, and asks:] Now, according to the Rabbis, in respect of what law is it (an idol) analogous to a sheretz? It is that it does not generate tumah. And in respect of what law is it (an idol) analogous to a niddah? It is that it is not a source of tumah through its severed limbs. And in respect of what law is it (an idol) analogous to a corpse? It is that it does not generate tumah by the size of a lentil.

[The Gemora notices that each of these three analogies all teaches a leniency.] The Gemora asks: Why? Interpret it rather stringently, as follows: In respect of what law is it (an idol) analogous to a sheretz? It is that it generates tumah by the size of a lentil. And in respect of what law is it (an idol) analogous to a niddah? It is that it generates tumah through a placed stone. And in respect of what law is it (an idol) analogous to a corpse? It is that it generates tumah through tumas ohel (if the tumah source and a person or object is under the same roof)?

The Gemora answers: The tumah of an idol is only by Rabbinical law, and consequently, where there are lenient and stringent analogies (i.e., there is a choice as to which analogy to draw), we draw a lenient analogy, but do not draw a stringent analogy. (83a – 83b)
