Bava Kamma Daf 10

Produced by Rabbi Avrohom Adler, Kollel Boker Beachwood

Daf Notes is currently being dedicated to the neshamot of

Moshe Raphael ben Yehoshua (Morris Stadtmauer) o”h

Tzvi Gershon ben Yoel (Harvey Felsen) o”h

May the studying of the Daf Notes be a zechus for their neshamot and may their souls find peace in Gan Eden and be bound up in the Bond of life

The Stringencies of Each

The Gemora cites a braisa: “Ox” is stricter than “pit” in some aspects, and “pit” is stricter than “ox” in other aspects. “Ox” is stricter than “pit” in the following aspects: If an ox gores and kills a person, the owner must pay kofer; if an ox kills a Canaanite slave, the owner must pay thirty shekels; when an ox’s judgment for killing is completed, it becomes forbidden for any pleasure; and it is in its habit to go and do damage, whereas all this does not apply by “pit.”

“Pit” is stricter than “ox” in the following aspects: “Pit” is made for damage from the onset and it is a mu’ad in the beginning, whereas all this does not apply to “ox.”

“Ox” is stricter than “fire” in some aspects, and “fire” is stricter than “ox” in other aspects. “Ox” is stricter than “fire” in the following aspects: If an ox gores and kills a person, the owner must pay kofer; if an ox kills a Canaanite slave, the owner must pay thirty shekels; when an ox’s judgment for killing is completed, it becomes forbidden for any pleasure; if the ox is given over to a deaf-mute, a deranged person or a minor (and the ox damages), the owner will be liable, whereas all this does not apply by “fire.”

“Fire” is stricter than “ox” in the following aspects: “Fire” is mu’ad from the onset, whereas “ox” is not.

“Fire” is stricter than “pit” in some aspects, and “pit” is stricter than “fire” in other aspects. “Pit” is stricter than

“fire” in the following aspects: “Pit” is made for damage from the onset and if the ox is given over to a deaf-mute, a deranged person or a minor (and the ox damaged), the owner will be liable, whereas all this does not apply by “fire.”

“Fire” is stricter than “pit” in the following aspects: It is normal for “fire” to go and damage and it is mu’ad to consume objects that are fit for it, and even for objects that are not fit for it, whereas all this does not apply to “pit.”

The Gemora asks: Why didn’t the braisa say the following: “Ox” is stricter than “pit,” for if an ox damages utensils, the owner will be liable, whereas the owner of the pit will be exempt from liability if utensils are damaged in a pit?

The Gemora answers: The braisa is in accordance with Rabbi Yehudah, who holds that the owner of the pit will be liable if utensils are damaged in a pit.

The Gemora asks: If the braisa reflects Rabbi Yehudah’s opinion, how can the end of the braisa be explained? The braisa states: “Fire” is stricter than “pit” in the following aspects: It is normal for “fire” to go and damage and it is mu’ad to consume objects that are fit for it, and even for objects that are not fit for it, whereas all this does not apply to “pit.” What are items fit for “fire”? Wood. What are items not fit for it? Utensils. And nevertheless, the braisa states that the owner of a pit will be exempt from liability if his pit damages items that are not fit for it. That would seem to be saying that there is no liability for utensils damaged in a pit!?

The Gemora answers: It must be that the braisa is in accordance with the Rabbis (who hold that there is no liability for utensils damaged in a pit), and the Tanna omitted this stringency (of “ox” over “pit”) because it omitted other things as well.

The Gemora asks: what else was left out?

The Gemora answers: The Tanna omitted the halachah of items that were hidden (where the exemption applies only to “fire”).

Alternatively, the Gemora answers: The braisa is in accordance with Rabbi Yehudah, and when the braisa states that “fire” is mu’ad to consume objects even for objects that are not fit for it, he was not referring to utensils; rather, he was referring to a case where the fire licked a plowed field or singed his stones. (9b – 10a)

Partial Damage

The Mishna had stated: If I caused part of its damage, I am obligated to pay for it as if I prepared the entire damage.

The Gemora cites a braisa: If I caused part of its damage, I am obligated to pay for as if I prepared the entire damage. What is the case? If one dug a bor nine tefachim deep and another person came and dug a tenth tefach, the last one is liable. Rebbe says: If an animal dies in this pit, the last one is liable (for only a bor ten tefachim deep can cause an animal to die). If an animal gets injured in this pit, they both will be liable (for a bor nine tefachim deep can cause an injury). [This is not like the Tanna of our Mishna who holds that the second person is always liable.]

Rav Pappa says: The Mishna can be discussing a case where an animal dies, and everyone will hold that the second person is liable.

Rabbi Zeira asks: Are there no other cases where a partial damage is regarded as a complete damage? But there is the case where an ox was handed over to the care of five people and one of them was negligent, so that the ox did damage; that one is liable!

The Gemora shows why this case does not reflect the Mishna’s halachah: What are the circumstances? If without the care of that one, the ox could not be guarded, is it not obvious that it is the one who was negligent that caused the entire damage? If, even without the care of that one, the ox could be guarded, what, if anything at all, has that one caused?

Rav Pappa asks: But behold there is the following case which is taught in a braisa: Five people were sitting upon one bench and did not break it, and then one person came along and sat upon it and broke it, the last one is liable (for the entire damage). Rav Pappa said: The braisa is referring to a person such as Pappa bar Abba (who was extremely heavy).

The Gemora shows why this case does not reflect the Mishna’s halachah: What are the circumstances? If without him, the bench would not have broken, is it not obvious that he is totally at fault? If, without him, it would also have broken, what, if anything at all, has that one caused?

The Gemora asks: In any event, how can the braisa be justified?

The Gemora answers: It could be discussing a case when without the last fellow the bench would have broken after two hours, whereas now it broke in one hour. The other fellows therefore can say to him: “If not for you we would have remained sitting a little while longer and would then have got up before any damage occurred.”

The Gemora asks: But why should he not say to them: “Had you not been sitting there, through me alone, the bench would not have broken?”

The Gemora answers: The braisa is discussing a case where he merely leaned upon them (and he prevented them from getting up) and the bench broke. [They did not contribute to the damage, for he prevented them from rising.]

The Gemora asks: Is it not obvious that he is liable?

The Gemora answers: You might have thought that damage done by a man’s force is not comparable with damage done directly by his body. The braisa teaches us that a man is responsible for his force just as he is liable for his body, for whenever he would be liable for his body breaking something; he would be liable if his force caused the damage.

The Gemora asks: But behold there is the following case which is taught in a braisa: When ten people beat a man with ten sticks, whether simultaneously or successively, so that he died, they are all exempt from the death penalty. Rabbi Yehudah ben Beseirah says: If they hit successively, the last one is liable, for he hastened his death. [According to Rabbi Yehudah, the last one did a partial damage, and it is regarded as if he did the complete damage!?]

The Gemora answers: The braisa does not deal with cases of murder.

Alternatively, you may say that the braisa does not discuss disputed cases.

The Gemora asks: Are they not? Didn’t we suggest that the Mishna is not in accordance with Rebbe?

The Gemora answers: That the Mishna is not in accordance with Rebbe, but in accordance with the Rabbis, we may suggest; whereas that it is in accordance with Rabbi Yehudah ben Beseirah, and not in accordance with the Rabbis, we will not suggest. (10a – 10b)

Carcass

The Mishna had stated: I am obligated to pay for the entire damage.

The Gemora notes: It would seem from the language of the Mishna (which uses a word that means “complete”), that this is the same as that which we have learned in the following braisa: It is written: Payment for the damage. This indicates that the owner (the damaged party) must retain the carcass as part of the payment. The Gemora cites various Scriptural sources for this halachah, and states why each one of them is needed. (10b)

INSIGHTS TO THE DAF

Deriving Benefit from a Corpse

By Reb Avi Lebovitz

Tosfos asks: Why do we need a special verse to exempt a person who is killed by falling in a pit? It should be included in the exposition of “and the corpse shall belong to him”!? This means that the owner of the pit is only liable when the corpse can belong to the owner of the animal. Just as we exclude an animal that is a disqualified sacrifice, which cannot belong entirely to its owner (since certain restrictions apply to it even after it is redeemed), we should exclude man as well, since it is forbidden to derive pleasure from a corpse!?

Tosfos answers that from this verse alone, I would have said that the owner of the pit is liable for damaging a gentile, since one is permitted to derive pleasure from his corpse, so we need a verse to exempt the pit owner for the death of all people.

Shulchan Aruch (Y.D. 349:1) writes that it is forbidden to derive benefit even from a gentile corpse. The Nekudas Hakesef quotes this from a Teshuvah Harashba. But, the Nikudas Hakesef points out that both our Tosfos and the Magid Mishnah hold that only a Jewish corpse is forbidden to derive pleasure from.

The Vilna Gaon proves that Tosfos is correct from David who used the foreskins from the Philistines to betroth the daughter of King Shaul. He also points out that the Rashba in his commentary on the Daf says like Tosfos.

However, the Pischei Teshuva reconciles Tosfos and the Rashba by saying that it is not Biblically forbidden, and that is why a special verse is needed to exempt the pit owner when a person is killed in a bor, but it is Rabbinically forbidden to derive pleasure from any corpse.

DAILY MASHAL

Who Pays for the Traffic Violation?

Our daf says that if a man is sitting on a bench and then someone else sits down next to him, eventually causing the bench to collapse, both of them must pay for the damage. The first person cannot claim that the second one is more responsible since he could have stood up when the second person came along. His decision to remain seated makes him equally liable for the damage.

Mishpetei HaTorah (I §34) cites a case in which a number of workers wanted to ride home at the end of a day's work using the transportation service provided by the factory.

The problem was that the number of passengers exceeded the legal limit. The driver refused to take more people because he was afraid he would receive a fine. Only after the workers assured him that they would pay if necessary did the driver turn on the engine and start rolling. Sure enough, a few minutes later a policeman stopped them and gave the driver a heavy fine.

A debate broke out among the workers over who should pay. Those who boarded first argued that the workers who came later should pay the fine, since the number of passengers only exceeded the limit once they had boarded. But the workers who boarded later countered that since ostensibly the transport is provided for all employees, it should make no difference who boards first. When the first workers saw that the number of passengers was beyond the limit, they could have gotten out.

According to our sugya the workers who got in last are indeed justified in their claim: the fine should be divided among all the passengers since they were all equally responsible.
