Pesachim Daf 57

Produced by Rabbi Avrohom Adler, Kollel Boker Beachwood

Daf Notes is currently being dedicated to the neshamah of

Tzvi Gershon Ben Yoel (Harvey Felsen) o”h

May the studying of the Daf Notes be a zechus for his neshamah and may his soul find peace in Gan Eden and be bound up in the Bond of life

1. The son of Bohayan gave pe’ah from vegetables and his father went and offered the poor double the amount of what they had received instead of taking vegetables that had been designated as pe’ah.

The son of Bohayan gave pe’ah from vegetables. His father found the poor people who had taken the vegetables and they were standing at the end of the garden, prepared to return home. Bohayan said to the paupers, “my children, rid yourselves of the vegetables you took as pe’ah, and in their stead I will give you double the amount in tithed produce. I am asking you to do this not because I do not wish that you retain these vegetables. Rather, I am making the request of you because the Chachamim have said that one should not designate pe’ah from vegetables.” The reason that Bohayan had to state, “I am asking you to do this not because I do not wish that you retain these vegetables,” even though he was offering them double the amount of produce than that had taken, was so the paupers should not claim that he is merely pushing us off. The paupers were justified in their skepticism, because they presumably said to themselves, “why would anyone offer us double for these vegetables? It must be that eh sis trying to steal our produce.” To prove his sincerity, Bohayan explained to them that he did not seek to begrudge them of the produce that they had, but he just wished to prevent them from eating produce that

Maaser was not taken from and to ensure that the Levites received their portion. (57a)

2. The owners of animals offered as sacrifices in the Bais HaMikdash would consecrate the hides of the animals to Heaven.

Initially, the Kohanim would place the hides of the offerings in the Parvah chamber of the Bais HaMikdash. In the evening the hides would be divided up among the members of the Bais av, family, of the Kohanim who performed the service that day in the Bais HaMikdash. Over a period of time, Kohanim would forcibly take more than their share of the hides, so the Kohanim instituted a system that the hides would be divided up from one Friday afternoon to the next. In this way all the watches would come and take hides together, and the entire watch could ensure that strong-arm Kohanim would not take more than their share. (Moshe divided the kohanim into eight watches. Shmuel the prophet and King Dovid later instituted twenty-four watches. Each watch would serve for one week in the Bais HaMikdash on a rotation system. A watch was divided into six families, and every family would serve one day of the week. The portions that went to the Kohanim would be divided up every evening among the members of the family that had performed the service that day.) Nonetheless, Kohanim of high ranking would still take the hides forcibly, so the owners, i.e. the Kohanim of that watch, went and consecrated the hides to Heaven, i.e. the upkeep of the Bais HaMikdash. (57a)

3. The entire Heichal became covered with gold plates.

When the Kohanim consecrated the hides to the upkeep of the bais HaMikdash, the treasurer of the bais HaMikdash went and sold the hides and with the proceeds he would purchase gold plates. Eventually, the entire Heichal (sanctuary) was covered with gold plates one amah long by one amah wide, and the plates were as thick as a gold dinar. On the festivals they would peel off the gold plates and they would place the plates on the stairway that joined the Men's Courtyard with the Women's Courtyard. This was done so the festival pilgrims would see the exquisite craftsmanship of the plates that had no blemishes. (57a)

4. The owners of sycamore trees in Yericho would consecrate their trees to Heaven.

Strong-armed thieves would take the sycamore tree trunks in Yericho by force. The owners, seeing they had no choice, went and consecrated the tree trunks to Heaven. (57a)

5. Abba Shaul ben Batnis said in the name of Abba Yosef ben Chanin that woe is to me from nefarious individuals.

Abba Shaul ben Batnis said in the name of Abba Yosef ben Chanin, "woe to me because of the house of Baysos, a Kohen Gadol. Woe to me because of their club like weapons that Bysos' servants used to terrorize the populace. Woe to me because of the house of Chanin, woe to me because of their whisperings, as the members of Chanin's household were notorious for offering bad counsel. Woe to me because of the house of Kasros, because of their pens, as they were notorious for writing letters that were for people's detriment. Woe to me because of the house of Yishmael ben Pi'achi, who oppressed others. All the people mentioned above are high priests, their sons are treasurers in the Bais HaMikdash, their sons-in-laws are amarkalin, in charge of all affairs in the Bais HaMikdash, and their servants would beat people with sticks. (57a)

6. The courtyard of the Bais HaMikdash cried out four cries.

The Courtyard of the Bais HaMikdash cried out four cries, i.e. a Heavenly voice cried out, or alternatively, it would have been fitting for the courtyard to have cried out. The first cry was, "leave here, sons of Eli, who defiled the Heichal of Hashem." This refers to Pinchas and Chafni, the two sons of Eli, who committed grave sins and caused that the house of Eli forfeited the priesthood. The Courtyard also cried out "leave here, Yissachar, a man from the village of Barkai, who honors himself but desecrates the sacred offerings of Heaven. This was because he would wrap his hand in silk and perform the sacrificial service." The Courtyard also cried out, "Raise up your heads, O gates, so that Yishmael ben Pi'achi, a student of Pinchas, can enter and perform the service as a Kohen Gadol." Although members of Yishmael's household were strong-arm oppressors, Yishmael himself was pious, and that is why he is referred to as the disciple of Pinchas the grandson of Aharon HaKohen, who were both righteous. The Courtyard also cried out, "Raise up your heads, O gates, so that Yochanan ben Narbai, student of Pinkai, may enter and fill his stomach with the scared offerings of Heaven." (57a)

7. Yochanan ben Narbai was a very generous person.

Yochanan ben Narbais would eat three hundred calves and drink three hundred kegs of wine for dinner, and he would eat forty se'ah of young birds for dessert. This is not to be taken literally. Rather, this demonstrates that he was a very generous person. In all the days of Yochanan ben Narbais there was never any meat leftover for the sacrifices in the Bais HaMikdash. Since Yochanan was so generous and supported many Kohanim, the Kohanim resided in Jerusalem permanently and they were available to consume any extra meat from the sacrifices. (57a)

8. Yissachar, a man from the village of Barkai, disgraced the sacrificial service and was punished accordingly.

Yissachar ben Barkai was punished for disgracing the service in the Bais HaMikdash. Regarding the procedure of receiving the blood of the sacrifices, it is said: the Kohen shall take from the blood of the offering. The extra words the Kohen teaches us that the Kohen must perform the service with his body, and nothing can interpose between the utensil and his skin. By wearing a silk cloth, Yissachar from the village of Barkai invalidated the service, and furthermore, Yissachar disgraced the service by not handling the flesh and blood of the offerings directly with his hand. Rav Yosef said, "Blessed is the Merciful One who punished Yissachar, a man from the village of Barkai in this world. The punishment that Yissachar received served as a warning to other Kohanim to respect the sacrificial offerings. (57a - 57b)

9. Yissachar ben Barkai assumed that a lamb's meat is better than a kid's meat.

A king and queen of the Hasmonean dynasty were debating what tastes better, the meat of a kid or the meat of a lamb. The king claimed that the meat of a kid tastes better, whereas the queen claimed that the meat of a lamb tasted better. They decided that although meat of a lamb normally tastes better, the Kohen Gadol could determine for them whether a choice cut of kid's meat would be superior to a choice cut of lamb meat. This was because the Kohen Gadol was consuming on a daily basis the fattest goats and lambs. Yissachar ben Barkai, with a dismissive waive of his hand, told the king, "If the kid's meat is better, it should be offered for the tamid sacrifice." The tamid offering, offered twice daily, was a lamb offering. Since the tamid was brought every day of the year, it must be the most important of all the sacrifices. The king became incensed, and said, "Since this man has no fear of the king, let us cut off his right hand." Yissachar gave a bribe to the king's servant, and he had his left hand cut off instead. The king heard about this and he had Yissachar's right hand cut off also. Yissachar lost his right hand because most of the services that were performed in the Bais HaMikdash were performed with the right hand. He lost his left hand because he used his left hand to warp the silk around his right hand. Since his sin began with his left hand, he lost his left hand first. (57a -57b)

10. Lambs and kids are equal in quality.

It is evident from his opinion stated that Yissachar, a man from the village of Barkai, was not learned, because the Mishnah states that Rabbi Shimon says, Scripture always mentions lambs before goats. One may assume that this is because lambs are superior to goats in quality. The Torah therefore teaches regarding a chatas offering where it is said if he shall bring a lamb as his offering. Prior to this verse it is said he shall bring as his offering a she-goat, and thus we see that the lamb and the goat are equal. Yissachar did not even read Scripture, as the Torah states regarding a shelamim offering if he offers a sheep, if his offering is a goat. The Torah does not state a preference, so this indicates that he can bring a lamb for his shelamim offering, or he can bring a goat for his shelamim offering. (57b)

The Gemara states that Yissachar ben Barkai was punished for disgracing the service in the Bais HaMikdash. Regarding the procedure of receiving the blood of the sacrifices, it is said: the Kohen shall take from the blood of the offering. The extra words the Kohen teaches us that the Kohen must perform the service with his body, and nothing can interpose between the utensil and his skin. By wearing a silk cloth, Yissachar from the village of Barkai invalidated the service, and furthermore, Yissachar disgraced the service by not handling the flesh and blood of the offerings directly with his hand. Yissachar was punished by the king who said, "Since this man has no fear of the king, let us cut off his right hand." Yissachar gave a bribe to the king's servant, and he had his left hand cut off instead. The king heard about this and he had Yissachar's right hand cut off also. The Maharsha writes that Yissachar lost his right hand because most of the services that were performed in the Bais HaMikdash were performed with the right hand.

Apparently the right hand always receives precedence to the left hand. The right represents chesed, kindness, and the left represents din, judgment. One should always make the effort to judge someone's action favorably before accusing someone of committing a sin. When HaShem created the world, He thought, so to speak, of creating the world with judgment only. When HaShem foresaw that the world could not exist only on judgment, He created mercy, and this is what allows the world to continue to exist. Let us always remember the Right Hand of HaShem which is extended to all of mankind as an opportunity to repent, as we recite in the High Holidays Prayers, ki yemincho peshutah lekabel shavim, Your right hand is extended to accept those who repent.
