Mishna

The Mishna says that anyone who slaughters a sacrifice is valid, since slaughtering any sacrifice (even the more severe kodshei kodashim) may be done by all – non-Kohanim, women, slaves, and impure people, as long as an impure person does not touch the meat. Since their slaughtering is valid, any incorrect intentions they had invalidates the sacrifice.

If any disqualified person accepted the blood with a thought of beyond its time or outside of its place, if there is still lifeblood from the animal, a valid Kohen should accept it (and do a proper sprinkling in the right place). If a qualified Kohen accepted the blood and passed it to an unqualified person, the latter must return it to the qualified one. If he accepted it with his right hand and placed it into his left hand, he should return it to his right hand. If he accepted it with a sacred vessel and then placed into a non-sacred vessel, he should return it to a sacred vessel. If the blood spilled from the vessel, and the Kohen gathered it, the sacrifice remains valid.

If he applied the blood on the ramp or not opposite the base (of the Altar; a side provided with a foundation; this excludes the south-east corner, which had no base), or he applied blood that was supposed to be applied below the chut hasikra above the chut hasikra, or he applied blood that was supposed to be applied above the chut hasikra below it (a red line on the Altar at the point where it was five amos high; this was the dividing line between the two halves of the Altar), or if he applied blood that was supposed to be applied in the Heichal outside of it, or he applied blood that was supposed to be applied outside the Heichal inside of it, if there is still lifeblood from the animal, a valid Kohen should accept it (and do a proper sprinkling in the right place). (31b – 32a)

Who can Slaughter?

The Gemora cites a braisa which learns that a Kohen is not required for slaughtering a sacrifice. This is derived from the following verse: He will slaughter (the sacrifice) and the Kohanim will accept the blood. The mitzvah on the Kohen only starts with accepting the blood. The slaughtering is before the accepting and, therefore, can be done by one who is not a Kohen. It may be slaughtered by women, slaves, people who are tamei; this applies even by kodshei kodashim. Although our Mishna seems to indicate that a non-Kohen, who slaughters the sacrifice, is only valid after the fact, the Gemora explains that this is not so. It can be slaughtered by a non-Kohen from the outset; it was only stated in such a manner because the Mishna mentioned a tamei person as well. A tamei should l’chatchilah, not slaughter a sacrifice, for we are concerned that he might come into contact with the meat of the animal.

The Gemora asks: But is the slaughtering of a tamei person even valid? Was it not taught in a braisa that the halachah of shechitah is juxtaposed to the halachah of semichah (the owner places his hands on the head of the sacrificial animal before it is slaughtered and leans on it with all his weight): Just as semichah must be performed by a person who is tahor, so too the shechitah must be performed by someone who is tahor?

The Gemora answers: That is only a Rabbinic law (lest he come into contact with the meat).

The Gemora asks: But it is written by semichah and shechitah “lifnei Hashem” (which indicates that it must be performed in the Temple Courtyard, a place where a tamei person cannot enter; accordingly, a tamei should be Biblically disqualified from performing the shechitah just as he cannot perform the semichah)!?

The Gemora answers: He can perform the shechitah with a long knife (while he is standing outside of the Courtyard).

The Gemora asks: Why don't we allow the tamei person to perform a semichah by standing outside and extending his hands inside!?

The Gemora answers: This cannot be done, for we hold that even a partial entry (his hands) into the Courtyard is regarded as an entry (and therefore it is forbidden).

Rav Chisda cites a different version: Just as shechitah must be performed by a person who is tahor, so too the semichah must be performed by someone who is tahor.

The Gemora asks: But it is written by semichah “lifnei Hashem” as well!?

The Gemora answers: We allow the tamei person to perform a semichah by standing outside and extending his hands inside.

The Gemora asks: Why don't we allow the tamei person to perform a shechitah with a long knife?

The Gemora answers: This is in accordance with Shimon Hatimni who maintains that the hands of the slaughterer must be further inside the Courtyard than the animal being slaughtered. (32a – 32b)

Partial Entry

Ulla says in the name of Rish Lakish: A tamei person who extends his hands into the Courtyard incurs lashes. This, he derives, through an analogy from touching. Just as a partial touching (with his fingers) is regarded as touching, so too a partial entry is regarded as an entry.

Rav Hoshaya asked Ulla from a braisa: A metzora whose eighth day (of purification) fell on Erev Pesach, but on that day had an emission of semen (resulting in the fact that he now cannot enter the Temple Mount to complete his purification process), and then immersed himself, the Chachamim said that although an ordinary tevil yom (one who has immersed in a mikvah but still has tumah on him until nightfall) may not enter the Temple Mount until nightfall, this one may enter in order to complete his purification process, thus enabling him to bring his pesach offering. It is preferable for a positive commandment that involves kares (pesach obligation) to override a positive commandment that does not involve kares (entering the Temple Mount while being a tevil yom). Rabbi Yochanan maintains that it is only Rabbinically forbidden for a tevil yom to enter the Temple Mount.

Now, Rav Hoshaya asks, if you maintain that a partial entry is regarded as an entry, how do we allow the metzora to insert his thumbs into the Courtyard? This is also a transgression that is punishable by kares, so how can it be overridden by the pesach commandment?

Ulla answers: From your bundle that you cited, I can answer you. Why do we allow this tevul yom to enter? Since we would allow an ordinary metzora to enter the Courtyard in order to complete his purification process, we allow a metzora who has had an emission of semen to enter as well.

Rav Yosef observed: It emerges that Ulla holds that if (on Erev Pesach) the majority (of the community) were zavin (a man who has an emission similar but not identical to a seminal discharge) and they became tamei with corpse tumah, since they are permitted in respect of their corpse tumah (for that is the law regarding the pesach offering; if the majority of the community were tamei through corpse tumah, the pesach offering is nevertheless offered), they are permitted in respect of their zivah as well.

Abaye asked him: How can you compare? Tumah was permitted, but zivah was not permitted!?

The Gemora suggests that Rav Yosef meant the following: If the majority were tamei with corpse tumah and they become zavin, since they are permitted in respect of their tumah, they are permitted in respect of their zivah as well.

Rav Yosef replied: Yes; that is what I meant to say.

Abaye asked him: Yet they are still not comparable. In the case of a metzora, it is permitted (for him to extend his thumbs into the Courtyard), and since it is permitted in respect of a metzora, it is permitted (in respect of his seminal emission as well). But tumah (by the pesach offering) is merely pushed aside (when the majority are tamei): perhaps then, in respect of the tumah, it was pushed aside, while in respect of the zivah, it was not pushed aside!?

Rava replied to him: On the contrary!?! The logic is the reverse: In the case of a metzora, where it is permitted; then, perhaps then, it is permitted in respect of the metzora, but not permitted in respect of the seminal emission. But tumah is pushed aside; what difference does it make then whether it is pushed aside in one instance or whether it is pushed aside in two instances?!

The Gemora draws a conclusion that they both hold that the tumah is merely pushed aside when the public is involved (and it is not "permitted"). (32b – 33a)

INSIGHTS TO THE DAF

IS IT PREFERABLE TO VIOLATE A TOLDAH RATHER THAN AN AV (FOR ONE WHO IS DEATHLY ILL)?

The Tchebeiner Gaon (Dovev Meisharim, 3:82) inquires as to what the halacha would be in the following case. We are permitted to desecrate Shabbos for one who is deathly ill. Is it preferable to perform a labor which is only a toldah, a derivative of the av melocha, the primary categories of labor forbidden to do on Shabbos; or perhaps, there is no halachic difference since both are Biblically forbidden?

He ruled on this issue and cited support from our Gemora. It was taught in a braisa: A metzora whose eighth day (of purification) fell on Erev Pesach, but on that day had an emission of semen (resulting in the fact that he now cannot enter the Temple Mount to complete his purification process), and then immersed himself, the Chachamim said that although an ordinary tevul yom (one who has immersed in a mikvah but still has tumah on him until nightfall) may not enter the Temple Mount until nightfall, this one may enter in order to complete his purification process, thus enabling him to bring his pesach offering. It is preferable for a positive commandment that involves kares (pesach obligation) to override a positive commandment that does not involve kares (entering the Temple Mount while being a tevul yom).

Rabbi Yochanan maintains that it is only Rabbinically forbidden for a tevul yom to enter the Temple Mount.

Ulla said: Why do we allow this tevul yom to enter? He answers: Since we would allow an ordinary metzora to enter the Temple Mount in order to complete his purification process, we allow a metzora who has had an emission of semen to enter as well.

Tosfos (in Yevamos) asks: Ulla maintains that a partial entry into an area which is forbidden to enter is regarded as a full entry. If so, why do we limit this metzora, who is a tevul yom to insert his right ear, thumb and big toe into the Temple Courtyard, let him be permitted to enter entirely? What would be the distinction?

Tosfos answers: Entering completely into the Courtyard is regarded as being more severe than a partial entry. The Torah forbids a tevul yom from entering completely into the Courtyard explicitly, but a partial entry is only derived through the means of a hekesh (a Midrashic juxtaposition). Although both prohibitions are Biblical, the one that is written explicitly is stricter than the one which is merely derived from an exposition.

It emerges from here that a Biblical prohibition written explicitly is more stringent than one which is only derived through an exposition. He therefore posits that it would be preferable to engage in the labor which would only be violating a toldah rather than one which would constitute an av melocha. This is because a toldah is not written explicitly in the Torah.

DAILY MASHAL

Who should Slaughter?

The Cheshek Shlomo (Menachos 19b) cites the Zohar which appears to say that a Yisroel should perform shechitah, not a Kohen. The Cheshek Shlomo suggests that the Zohar is referring to korbonos yachid in that there is a mitzvah for the owner to slaughter his own korban (as above). However, a korban tzibur should be slaughtered by a Kohen (as Tosfos says in Kiddushin).

The Bais Yitzchak, in explanation of the Zohar, suggests that it was preferable to have Yisroelim perform shechitah so that the Kohanim would avoid staining their bigdei kehunah - priestly garments. [The Gemora on 65b says that if a Kohen performs an avodah while wearing soiled garments, the avodah is possul - invalid.]
