Species of Birds

Rav Yehudah said: The shekitna bird with the long legs and red body is permitted, and the mnemonic is murzema (which is similar to the shekitna, and was known to be permitted); that with the short legs and red body is forbidden, and the mnemonic is the law that the dwarf is unfit (to serve as a Kohen in the Temple); and that with the long legs and yellow body is forbidden, and the mnemonic is the rule that if the internal organs turned green, it is tereifah.

Rav Yehudah said: The shalach (mentioned in the Torah as one of the nonkosher birds – the cormorant) is the bird that draws fish out of the sea; the duchifas (the wild peacock, or hoopoe) is so called because its beauty (feathers) is bound to its head.

The Gemora cites a braisa to this effect: The duchifas is so called because its beauty is bound to its head, and it was the bird that brought the shamir to the Temple (a minute insect which the Gemora in Gittin (68) relates could cut through the hardest stone).

Whenever Rabbi Yochanan used to see the shalach, he would exclaim: Your judgments are in the great deep (for it dives to the depths of the sea as an emissary of God to kill any fish that is destined to die at that time), and whenever he used to see an ant, he would exclaim: Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains (His righteousness extends to the tiny ant so that its sustenance is provided just as the mighty mountains).

Ameimar said: Lakkani and butnei (types of birds) are permitted; and as for shaknai and batnai – in a place where it is the custom to eat them, they are permitted, and wherever it is the custom not to eat them, they are forbidden.

The Gemora asks: Why does this depend on custom? [It is surely a halachic issue - they are either permitted or forbidden!]

The Gemora answers: Indeed it does; nevertheless, there is no difficulty. The custom to prohibit the shaknai and batnai was in that place where the peres and the ozniyah are commonly found (since the shaknai and batnai are birds that possess only one kosher sign, they are forbidden out of concern that they might be a peres or ozniyah); whereas the custom to permit them was in that place where the peres and the ozniyah are not commonly found.

Abaye said: The ku’ei and kaku’ei are forbidden, but kaku’asa is permitted. In the West, however, one would incur lashes for eating it (for, according to them, it was definitely nonkosher), and it is called by them tachvasa.

The Gemora cites a braisa: The tinshemes (mentioned in the Torah as one of the nonkosher birds) is the ba’us among the birds (hoots at night – the owl; alternatively, Rashi says that it’s referring to the bat). The Gemora asks: Perhaps the Torah is referencing the ba’us among the creeping creatures (and it is not referring to a type of bird at all)? The Gemora answers: Go and derive it by one of the thirteen exegetical principles by which the Torah is expounded, namely: The meaning of a passage can be understood from its context. Now what is the Torah dealing with? Birds! Then, this too is a bird.

It was likewise taught in a braisa with regard to creeping creatures: The tinshemes (mentioned in the Torah as one of the creeping creatures) is the ba'us among the creeping creatures (the mole). The Gemora asks: Perhaps the Torah is referencing the ba'us among the birds (and it is not referring to a type of creeping creature at all)? The Gemora answers: Go and derive it by one of the thirteen exegetical principles by which the Torah is expounded, namely: The meaning of a passage can be understood from its context. Now what is the Torah dealing with? Creeping creatures! Then, this too is a creeping creature.

Abaye said: The ba'us among the birds is the kipof, and the ba'us among the creeping creatures is the kurpedai.

Rav Yehudah said: The ka'as (mentioned in the Torah as one of the nonkosher birds) is the kuk (the pelican), and the racham (also mentioned there) is the sherakrak (the magpie, or the roller, according to others).

Rabbi Yochanan said: Why is it called the racham? It is because when the racham comes, mercy (rachamim) comes to the world (through rainfall).

Rav Bibi bar Abaye said: This happens only when it perches upon something and cries out with a 'sherakrak' sound. There is a tradition that if it sits upon the ground and cries out, the Messiah will come at once, for it is written: I will whistle for them and gather them.

Rav Adda bar Shimi said to Mar the son of Rav Idai: Didn't a rechem once settle upon a plowed field and cried out, and then a stone fell upon it and broke its skull?

He answered: That one was a liar (and was therefore punished).

The Gemora cites a braisa: 'Oreiv' (the crow - mentioned in the Torah as one of the nonkosher birds) signifies the oirev, and 'every oirev' includes the oirev of the deep, and 'according to its kind' includes the oirev that comes with the head of pigeons.

[The Gemora clarifies this braisa.] The master had said: 'Oreiv' signifies the oirev. But is it here before us (for then, the Tanna would be showing it to us; otherwise, how is he assisting us)? Rather, the braisa should read as follows: 'Oreiv' signifies the black oirev, as it is written: His locks are curled and black as an oreiv.

The oirev of the deep is referring to the white spotted oirev, as it is written: And its appearance (the affliction) is deeper than the skin, that is – it is as the sunlight that appears deeper than the shade.

Rav Pappa explains the last portion of the braisa: The oirev that comes with the head of pigeons. It should be read as follows: It is an oreiv whose head resembles that of a pigeon.

The Gemora cites a braisa: The neitz (mentioned in the Torah as one of the nonkosher birds) is the neitz (the sparrow hawk), and 'according to its kind' includes the bar chirya, which Abaye says it means the shurinka (the shrike).

Rav Chisda said: The chasidah (the stork - mentioned in the Torah as one of the nonkosher birds) is the white dayah. And it is called that because it does kindness (chasidus) to its friends (by sharing its food). The anafah (the heron) is the hot-tempered dayah, and it is called that because it becomes angry with its friends.

Rav Chanan, the son of Rav Chisda, said in the name of Rav Chisda, who had said it in the name of Rav Chanan, the son of Rava, in the name of Rav: There are twenty-four (types of) nonkosher birds (mentioned in the Torah).

Rav Chanan, the son of Rav Chisda, said to Rav Chisda: Where is this in reference to? In Vayikra, there are only twenty enumerated, and in Devarim, there are only twenty-one!? And even if you will answer me that the da'ah mentioned in Vayikra, but not in Devarim, should be added to the list, even then - there would only be twenty-two!?

He replied: Your mother's father (Rav Chanan, the son of Rava) reported in the name of Rav: The words 'according to its kind' stated four times (once in connection with the ayah; once with the anafah; once with the oreiv; and finally with the neitz), represent four more birds.

The Gemora asks: Then there would be twenty-six?

Abaye answered: The da'ah (mentioned exclusively in Vayikra) and the ra'ah (mentioned exclusively in Devarim) are one and the same, for should it enter your mind that they are two distinct birds, then consider this: The purpose of Devarim is to add to the laws; why is it that here (in Vayikra), it mentions the da'ah, but there (in Devarim), it lists only the ra'ah and not the da'ah? It must be that the ra'ah and the da'ah are one and the same.

The Gemora asks: But still - there are only twenty-five!?

Abaye answered: Just as the ra'ah and the da'ah are one and the same, so too, are the ayah and the dayah, for should it enter your mind that they are two distinct birds, then consider this: The purpose of Devarim is to add to the laws; why is it that here (in Vayikra), it mentions the words 'according to its kind' in connection to the ayah (to include a similar type of bird), but there (in Devarim), these words are mentioned in connection with the dayah? It must be that the ayah and the dayah are one and the same.

The Gemora asks: But since the ayah and the dayah are one and the same, why are they both stated?

The Gemora answers: It is for the reason given in the following braisa: Rebbe says: It is sufficient when I read that the ayah is forbidden, why then is the dayah mentioned? This is in order not to give skeptics an opening to dispute (the fact that this bird is nonkosher), for you might call it the ayah and they the dayah, or you the dayah and they the ayah; therefore it is written in Devarim: The ra'ah, the ayah and the dayah according to its kind.

The Gemora asks from the following braisa: Why was the list (of nonkosher animals) repeated in Devarim? Animals were repeated because of the shesuah, and birds because of the ra'ah. Now presumably, just as in the case of animals, a new creature is added to the list, so too in the case of birds, a new bird (the ra'ah) is added!?

The Gemora answers: No! Regarding animals, a new creature is added, but regarding birds, the addition is merely a clarification.

The Gemora notes that Rav's opinion differs from that of Rabbi Avahu, for Rabbi Avahu said: The ra'ah is the same as the ayah. Why is it called ra'ah as well? It is because it can see very far. And it was taught in a braisa as well: It may stand in Bavel and see carrion in the land of Israel.

The Gemora notes further: Since according to Rabbi Avahu, the ra'ah and the ayah are one and the same, it would follow then that the da'ah is not the same as the ra'ah (for otherwise, there will be less than twenty-four birds). Accordingly, let us consider the following: The purpose of Devarim is to add to the laws; why is it that here (in Vayikra) the da'ah is mentioned, but there (in Devarim), the da'ah is not mentioned? It must be that the da'ah, the ra'ah and the ayah are all one and the same. But then, since the ra'ah and the ayah are one and the same, it would follow that the dayah is not the same as the ayah (for otherwise, there will be less than twenty-four birds), and accordingly, we can ask: why is it that there (in Vayikra), the words 'according to its kind' are mentioned in connection with the ayah, whereas there (in Devarim), these words are not referenced to the ayah, but to the dayah? It must therefore be said that the da'ah, the ra'ah, the ayah and the dayah are all one and the same (and there will be a total of twenty-three birds).

The Gemora cites a braisa: Issi ben Yehudah says: In the East there are one hundred nonkosher birds, and they all are of the species of ayah.

Avimi the son of Rabbi Avahu taught the following braisa: There are seven hundred species of nonkosher fish, eight hundred species of nonkosher grasshoppers, but the nonkosher species of birds are innumerable.

The Gemora asks: But there are only twenty-four species of nonkosher birds?

The Gemora answers: Rather say that the species of kosher birds are innumerable.

The Gemora cites a braisa: Rebbe says: It is well known to Him Who spoke and the world came into being that the nonkosher animals are more numerous than the kosher ones; therefore the Torah enumerated the kosher ones. It is also well known to Him Who spoke and the world came into being that the kosher birds are more numerous than the nonkosher ones; therefore the Torah enumerated the nonkosher ones.

The Gemora asks: What is the significance of this teaching?

The Gemora answers: It teaches us the lesson, also expressed by Rav Huna in the name of Rav, and others say that it was Rav Huna in the name of Rav in the name of Rabbi Meir that a teacher should always teach his pupil in a succinct manner.

Rabbi Yitzchak said: For the eating of kosher birds we rely upon tradition (and if he saw his teacher or an decent person eating a specific type of bird, he may do so as well). A hunter is believed to say that his teacher transmitted to him that this bird is kosher.

Rabbi Yochanan qualified that this is provided that the teacher was familiar with the (twenty-four nonkosher) birds and the ones that go by their names.

Rabbi Zeira inquired: Did he mean a master as in a Torah scholar, or a hunting teacher? The Gemora proves from Rabbi Yochanan's qualification that Rabbi Yitzchak meant a master in hunting. (63a – 63b)

DAILY MASHAL

Stork's Kindness

The Gemora notes that the Hebrew word for stork is "chasidah" which sounds like the Hebrew word for kindness – "chesed." The Gemora explains that this non-kosher bird is so called because it acts with kindness towards its friends by sharing its food with them.

The obvious question is: Why would the Torah prohibit eating the stork if it has such a behavior? In his commentary on Chumash (Vayikra 11:13), Ramban writes that the Torah prohibited the birds which have a cruel nature. How does this apply to the stork, which acts with kindness towards its friends?

It is reported that the Chidushei Ha"Rim explained that kindness cannot be restricted to friends, and food must be shared with all who are hungry. Selective kindness can thus be viewed as self-serving rather than as altruistic, characteristic of the insensitiveness of non-kosher birds.
