Mishnah

If a man says to his wife, “This is your get on the condition that you will give me two hundred zuz,” she is divorced and she should give the money. If he says, “On condition that you must give me the money within thirty days,” then if she gives him the money within thirty days, she is divorced; if not, she is not divorced. Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel says: There was an incident in Tzidon where someone made a condition with his wife that she would only be divorced if she gave him his cloak, and she lost his cloak. The Chachamim said: She should give him the monetary value of the cloak. (74a1 – 74a2)

“She Should Give”

The Gemora asks: What does it mean: And she should give?

Rav Huna says: It means: and she will give the money (meaning that when she gives the money, the get is valid retroactively from the time that she received it). Rav Yehudah says: When she gives the money, the get becomes valid. [They argue as to the meaning of the words “on the condition.”]

The Gemora asks: What is the difference between them?

The Gemora answers: The difference is in a case where the get was torn or lost (before she gives the money). According to Rav Huna, she will not need a second get, but according to Rav Yehudah, she will.

There is a similar argument regarding kiddushin. The Mishnah states: If someone says, “You are betrothed to me on the condition that I will give you two hundred zuz,” she is betrothed to him and he should give the money.

The argument between Rav Huna and Rav Yehudah was similarly taught there (regarding kiddushin, and is seemingly redundant). Rav Huna says: And he should give the money (and the kiddushin will be effective retroactively), while Rav Yehudah says that the betrothal is effective only when he gives the money.

The Gemora asks: What is the difference between them?

The Gemora answers: The difference would be in a case where she accepted kiddushin from someone else (before receiving the money). According to Rav Huna, the giving of the money is a mere condition, and therefore he can merely fulfill the condition and remain married to her (and the second person’s kiddushin is null and void). According to Rav Yehudah, the kiddushin is only effective when he gives the money. Being that he has not given it to her, it is not considered a kiddushin (and the second person’s kiddushin is valid).

The Gemora explains: It is necessary for us to have both arguments stated explicitly by both gittin and kiddushin. If it would have stated this only regarding kiddushin, we might have thought that Rav Huna only maintained that such a kiddushin is valid retroactively, as he clearly is trying to have a closer relationship with her. [We would therefore assume he wanted the kiddushin to be valid starting now.] However, regarding gittin where he is trying to distance her (but it is difficult for him to do so), perhaps he wants the get to be valid only if she actually fulfills the condition. Therefore, perhaps Rav Huna would agree to Rav Yehudah in a case of gittin. [This is why the case of gittin was certainly needed.]

If the argument was stated only regarding gittin, we might think that Rav Huna only held the get was starting now because he is not embarrassed to claim the money from her in Beis Din. However, being that she would be embarrassed to demand the money from her “husband” in Beis Din, Rav Huna would agree to Rav Yehudah that the kiddushin is valid only when the money is actually given. This is why Rav Huna’s position had to be stated both regarding kiddushin and gittin.

It was also necessary to state Rav Yehudah’s position twice. If Rav Yehudah’s position would be stated only regarding kiddushin, one might think that this is because she is embarrassed to demand the money from her “husband” in Beis Din. However, being that she is not embarrassed to demand money in Beis Din from her ex-husband, one might think that the get is effective retroactively.

If Rav Yehudah’s position was stated only by gittin, one would think that this is because he is trying to distance her (but it is difficult for him to do so), and perhaps he wants the get to be valid only if she actually fulfills the condition. However, regarding kiddushin, where he is trying to have a closer relationship with her, perhaps he would agree that it is effective retroactively. This is why Rav Yehudah’s position had to be stated both by gittin and kiddushin.

The Gemora asks on Rav Yehudah from a Baraisa. The Baraisa states: If someone says, “This is your get on condition that you give me two hundred zuz,” even if the get is torn or lost, she is divorced. She should not marry someone else until she gives him the money.

Another Baraisa states: If someone said, “This is your get on condition that you give me two hundred zuz,” and he then died, if she gave the money before he died, she does not fall to yibum. If not, she does fall to yibum. Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel says: She can give the money to his father or brothers (after he is dead). The argument between them seems to hinge on whether or not he meant that the money could also be given to his inheritors. However, in both of these Baraisos, it is clear that this is a mere condition, and the actual get is effective retroactively when it was given, not when the money is given, unlike the opinion of Rav Yehudah!?

Rav Yehudah could answer: These Baraisos follow the opinion of Rebbe, for Rav Huna said in the name of Rebbe: Whoever says something is “on the condition,” he means that it should take effect retroactively as long as the condition is eventually fulfilled. The Rabbis argue on Rebbe, and I hold like the Rabbis.

Rabbi Zeira says: When I was in Bavel, we used to say that Rebbe’s principle that whoever says something is “on the condition,” means that it should take effect retroactively (as long as the condition is eventually fulfilled) is argued upon by the Rabbis. However, when I went to Eretz Yisroel, I encountered Rabbi Assi who was giving over a teaching of Rabbi Yochanan, and he said that everyone in fact agrees to this principle. They argue only regarding one who says, “From today and after I die.”

This is supported by the following Baraisa. The Baraisa states: If someone gives his wife a get saying that it is “from today and after death,” the Chachamim say that the get’s validity is in doubt, while Rebbe says that it is a valid get. [The fact that they only argue in this case implies that they do not argue regarding a case of “on condition.”]

The Gemora asks: According to Rav Yehudah who says that Rebbe and the Rabbis indeed argue in a case “on condition,” why don’t they explicitly argue in this case as well?

The Gemora answers: They argue in this case to show the leniency of Rebbe (that he is even lenient in this case).

The Gemora asks: According to Rav Yehudah, they should still argue regarding “on condition” in order to show the stringency of the Rabbis!?

The Gemora answers: The power of being lenient is more important to show (than being stringent). (74a2 – 74b1)

Timed Condition

The Mishnah had stated: If a man says, “This is your get on condition that you must give me the money within thirty days,” if she gives him the money within thirty days, she is divorced. If not, she is not divorced.

The Gemora asks: The Mishnah’s law that the condition of payment within thirty days must be fulfilled is obvious!?

The Gemora answers: One might think that he is not really so concerned that the payment be on time. It is possible that the condition was merely made to try to speed up the payment. The Mishnah therefore says that it is looked at as a binding condition. (74b2)

Fulfilling Conditions

The Mishnah had stated: Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel says: There was an incident in Tzidon where someone made a condition with his wife that she would only be divorced if she gave him his cloak, and she lost his cloak. The Chachamim said: She should give him the monetary value of the cloak.

The Gemora asks: What prompted Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel’s story in our Mishnah?

The Gemora answers: The Mishnah is as if it is missing words, and it means as follows. If someone said, “On condition you give me my cloak,” and his cloak was lost,” he meant that the get is only valid if he actually gets back his cloak. Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel says: She should merely give him its value (for he made the condition for his benefit). And Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel said: There was an incident in Tzidon where someone made a condition with his wife that she would only be divorced if she gave him his cloak, and his cloak went lost. The Chachamim said: She should give him the monetary value of the cloak.

Rabbi Assi inquired of Rabbi Yochanan: If someone said, “Here is your get on condition that you pay me two hundred zuz,” and he then said, “I forgo them to you,” what is the halachah? This question can be asked both according to the Rabbis and Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel. According to the Rabbis, it is possible that money is an invalid substitute only in the case of the cloak where he did not forgo the cloak; however, in this case, where he himself relented, it is possible that it is valid. According to Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel, it is possible that only when she actually gave him money in exchange, the condition is deemed fulfilled. However, where he gets nothing at all, it is possible the condition is not deemed fulfilled.

Rabbi Yochanan answered: She is not divorced.

The Gemora asks a question from a Mishnah. The Mishnah states: If one says to his fellow, “Konam that you will not benefit from me, if you do not give my son a kor of wheat and two barrels of wine.” Rabbi Meir rules: He is forbidden to derive benefit from him until he gives the wheat and wine to his son. The Rabbis, however, maintain that he can annul his vow without a sage by declaring, “I regard it as though I have received it." [This implies that relenting is as good as receiving.]

The Gemora answers: In our case, he is trying to pain her (by making her give money, and he did not end up receiving anything). In this case, he was merely trying to have his son benefit.

There was a person who told his sharecropper, "Most sharecroppers water the field three times a year (besides all of their other labors), and they receive one quarter of the fruit. You should water it four times, and I will give you one third of the fruit." In the end, rain came, making it unnecessary to water four times. Rav Yosef said: He did not have to water a fourth time (and therefore should only receive one quarter). Rabbah says: He didn't need to water (but should still get one third).

The Gemora asks: Let us say that Rav Yosef has the same opinion as the Rabbis, while Rabbah holds like Rabban Shimon!

The Gemora rejects this comparison: This cannot be, as we know the halachah follows Rabbah in this case, but it does follow Rabban Shimon!

The Gemora answers: It must be that they both hold like the Rabbis. Rav Yosef obviously holds like the Rabbis. Rabbah will say that even he can hold like the Rabbis. The Rabbis only said that it must be given because he wanted to pain her. However, here, that it was a matter of profit, and it was merely unnecessary for him to water, he could still receive payment. (74b1 – 74b3)

DAILY MASHAL

It is written: Es habrochoh asher tish'm'u" - The blessing that you will hear. Regarding the curses it is written: If you will not listen. Why is the language different?

Rash"l comments by the blessings: "Al m'nas asher tish'm'u," - on the condition that you will hear.

The Maharal explains that Rashi is stressing the inherent advantage of a mitzvoh over a sin. By explaining the intention of these words to mean that it is conditional, we invoke the Talmudic axiom that "al m'nas" connotes that the matter is activated starting right then, "Kol ho'omer al m'nas k'omer mei'ach'shov domi." Thus if you will just listen to the mitzvos the reward will begin at that moment, in contra-distinction to a sin. The retribution for a sin takes place only upon actually committing it.

The Rinas Yitzchok explains that when we even plan to do something good, we are rewarded even if our plans don't happen for some reason (Kiddushin 40a).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS FROM YESTERDAY'S DAF

to refresh your memory

Q: What is the halachah if a seriously ill man gives a get to his wife, and then he recovers? May he withdraw the get?

A: It is a machlokes Amoraim.

Q: What is the halachah if the husband says, "This is your get if I do not recover from this sickness," and then he is bitten by a snake?

A: It is not a get because it is an unusual case, and one that he did not foresee happening.

Q: Can the wife of a husband who was given a divorce on condition that he dies be alone with her husband between the delivery of the divorce and his death?

A: No, unless they are in the presence of witnesses.
