Acquiring Through Cohabitation

The Gemora inquires: Is the beginning of cohabitation (either when the male organ makes contact with the female organ, or the first stages of penetration) the part that acquires, or is the end of copulation the part that acquires? The difference would be if he began to cohabit with a woman, and she then accepted kiddushin from someone else. Alternatively, this would make a difference regarding whether or not a Kohen Gadol may acquire a (virgin) wife through cohabitation. [If it is the completion of the act that acquires, he may not do so, as she will not be a virgin when the kiddushin takes effect, and the Torah commands that he must marry only a virgin.] What is the law?

Ameimar answered in the name of Rava: Whoever cohabits does so with the intent of completing intercourse (and therefore it is the end of cohabitation that effect kiddushin). (10a1 – 10a2)

What does Cohabitation Accomplish?

The Gemora inquires: Does cohabitation effect marriage (nisuin), or does it effect only betrothal (erusin)? The difference would be whether he inherits her, can become impure to her (if she dies and he is a Kohen, who may only become impure to dead close relatives, and this would include a wife after nisuin), and annul her vows. If it effects nisuin, then he inherits her, he may become impure to her and he annuls her vows, while if it effects only erusin, he does not inherit her, he may not become impure to her and he may not annul her vows. What is the law?

Abaye attempts to answer this question by quoting the following Mishnah (in Kesuvos 46b): A father has jurisdiction over his daughter (who is a na'arah or younger) regarding her betrothal; he receives the money, he accepts the document, or he can give his daughter to him for cohabitation. The father is entitled to that which she finds, and to her earnings and to annul her vows. He receives her get, but he does not eat the fruit of her property during her lifetime (if she had inherited property from her mother's family). Once she is married (nisuin), the husband exceeds the father in that he does eat the fruit of her property during her lifetime. Abaye points out that the first part of the Mishnah gave a case where she was acquired through cohabitation, and then gives a contrasting case where she is married. [This implies that it only effects betrothal!]

The Gemora answers: It is possible that the contrasting case of marriage was when the other methods of kiddushin listed in the Mishnah are used.

Rava attempts to answer this question from a Mishnah (in Niddah 44b): A girl who is at least three years old can become betrothed through cohabitation, and if a yavam cohabits with her, he has acquired her, and if she is married and someone else cohabits with her, he would be liable for cohabiting with a married woman, and if she is a niddah and someone cohabits with her, he will become tamei to such an extent that he will contaminate a bottom mattress (with the same degree of tumah, just as a cloth which was spread) over a zav (but not to the same degree applicable to the niddah herself). If a Kohen marries her (with nisuin), she is entitled to eat terumah. If one of the arayos listed in the Torah cohabit with her, they are executed on her account, but she is exempt. And if she is a daughter of a Kohen and a disqualified person cohabits with her, she becomes disqualified from eating terumah. Rava points out that the Mishnah first discusses her being acquired through cohabitation, and then gives a contrasting case of when she is married. [This implies that it effects only betrothal!]

The Gemora answers: This is what it was saying: If this nisuin (which was accomplished through cohabitation) was with a Kohen, she may eat terumah. [The case of marriage is a continuation, not a contrast.]

The Gemora attempts to answer this by quoting the following: Yochanan ben Bag Bag already sent to Rabbi Yehudah ben Beseirah in Netzivin: I heard about you - that you say that a betrothed Jewish girl (to a Kohen) may eat terumah (even prior to nisuin). He sent back: You do not say this way? It is well established that you are an expert in many areas of the Torah. Do you not know how to expound a kal vachomer? If regarding a Canaanite slave woman, where the law is that a Kohen's cohabitation with her would not enable her to eat terumah, but his acquisition of her with money would make her eligible to eat terumah; then a woman (the wife of a Kohen), where the law is that a Kohen's cohabitation with her enables her to eat terumah, is it not logical that betrothing her with money should allow her to eat terumah! However, what can I do, as the Chachamim have already instituted a decree that a daughter of an Israelite who is betrothed (to a Kohen) may not eat terumah until after she was brought into the chupah.

The Gemora asks: What are the circumstances of the cases (of the money and cohabitation)? If the cases are when the cohabitation was performed together with chupah and (he deduces regarding a case where) money was given together with chupah, in both of these cases she is permitted to eat terumah! It must be that the case is when the cohabitation was performed together with chupah, and (he deduces regarding a case where) money was given without chupah (she should be eligible to eat terumah). This is not a good comparison, as in the first case, there are two acts (cohabitation and chupah) and in the second only one!? Rather, the cases must be when the cohabitation was performed without chupah and (he deduces regarding a case where) money was given without chupah.

Accordingly, if we say that cohabitation effects nisuin, it is understandable why it was more obvious to him that (the case of) cohabitation is stronger than a kiddushin of money (as cohabitation effects both kiddushin and nisuin, whereas an acquisition through money only effects erusin). However, if cohabitation effects kiddushin only, why here (in the case of cohabitation) is it obvious to him (that she may eat terumah) and here (in the case of money) it is doubtful to him?

Rav Nachman bar Yitzchak answers: The case is where the cohabitation was performed together with chupah and (he deduces regarding a case where) the money was given alone without chupah (that this should enable her to eat terumah). And that which you asked that this is not a good comparison, as in the first case, there are two acts (cohabitation and chupah) and in the second only one, the kal vachomer is still valid as follows: If regarding a Canaanite slave woman, where the law is that a Kohen's cohabitation with her would not enable her to eat terumah – even when it is performed together with chupah, but his acquisition of her with money without chupah would make her eligible to eat terumah; then a woman (the wife of a Kohen), where the law is that a Kohen's cohabitation with her, when it is performed together with chupah, enables her to eat terumah, is it not logical that betrothing her with money without chupah should allow her to eat terumah! However, what can I do, as the Chachamim have already instituted a decree that a daughter of an Israelite who is betrothed (to a Kohen) may not eat terumah until after she was brought into the chupah, on account of Ulla. [A woman betrothed to a Kohen might have some terumah when she is still in her father's house, and mistakenly give it to her brothers or sisters.]

The Gemora asks: Why didn't Ben Bag Bag agree to this reasoning?

The Gemora answers: Regarding a Canaanite slave woman, he (the buyer) leaves nothing (behind) in her acquisition (as money finalizes the act). Here (with respect to the betrothed woman), he (the husband) leaves something (behind) in her acquisition (as money is not sufficient to effect nisuin).

Ravina said: According to Torah law, it is obvious to him (Ben Bag Bag) that she (a woman betrothed to a Kohen) eats terumah. He sent him (R' Yehudah) regarding Rabbinic law. And this is what he sent him: I heard about you - that you say that a betrothed Jewish girl (to a Kohen) may eat terumah (even prior to nisuin), and you are not concerned of "simpon" – "something that can force a cancellation" (that a blemish will be found and the kiddushin will retroactively be nullified, meaning that she was never allowed to eat terumah). He sent back: You do not say this way? It is well established that you are an expert in many areas of the Torah. Do you not know how to expound a kal vachomer? If regarding a Canaanite slave woman, where the law is that a Kohen's cohabitation with her would not enable her to eat terumah, but his acquisition of her with money would make her eligible to eat terumah, and we are not concerned for "simpon"; then a woman (the wife of a Kohen), where the law is that a Kohen's cohabitation with her enables her to eat terumah, is it not logical that betrothing her with money should allow her to eat terumah, and we should not be concerned for "simpon"! However, what can I do, as the Chachamim have already instituted a decree that a daughter of an Israelite who is betrothed (to a Kohen) may not eat terumah until after she was brought into the chupah, on account of Ulla.

Ben Bag Bag objects to this kal vachomer, for "simpon" does not apply by slaves (there is no blemish that will invalidate the purchase).

The Gemora explains: A blemish does not nullify a sale by a slave, for if the defect is recognizable from the outside, the buyer has seen it (and he nevertheless purchased the slave). If the defect is on the inside, what difference does it make; a slave is meant to work and this type of blemish should not hinder the slave from working at all. If the slave is found to be a thief or kidnapper, the sale is valid anyway. What can there be that would nullify a sale? If he was found to be an armed bandit or a person sentenced to death by the government (which would nullify the sale), such characters are generally public knowledge. (Thus, there is no reason to prohibit a Kohen's slave from eating terumah.)

The Gemora asks: Let us see: According to both of them, she (a woman betrothed to a Kohen) may not eat terumah (on account of the Rabbinic decree); what then is the practical difference between the two reasons?

The Gemora answers: The difference between them is in the following cases: If her intended husband accepted the kiddushin even if she has defects, or where her father delivered her to the intended husband's agents or where the father's agents went together with the groom's agents to deliver her to him. DAILY MASHAL

Expert in many areas

Rabbi Yehudah ben Beseira sent back to Ben Bag Bag: You do not hold this way? I understand that you are an expert in many areas of the Torah. Don't you know how to derive a kal vachomer?

Why must he be an expert in many areas of the Torah in order to expound a kal vachomer? Isn't a kal vachomer based upon logic?

Reb Elchonon Wasserman cites from Reb Chaim Brisker who explained as follows: One need not be an expert to expound a kal vachomer; however, the kal vachomer might be refuted from another area of Torah. In order for one to expound a kal vachomer that will not be refuted from anywhere else in the Torah, he must be an expert in all areas of Torah.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS FROM YESTERDAY'S DAF

to refresh your memory

Q: From where is it derived that a bill of sale is written by the seller?

A: Either from the verse, "And he will sell from his ancestral heritage," or from a halachah l'Moshe mi'Sinai.

Q: Why does Rish Lakish disqualify a betrothal document when it is not written lishmah?

A: We learn out the halachos of kiddushin from gittin (v'yatzah...v'haysah).

Q: How can we find a case of a betrothed virgin na'arah if the verse "u'va'alah" teaches us that kiddushin will only be valid after kiddushin and bi'ah?

A: If he was mekadesh with a document without bi'ah.
