Mishna

[On Shavuos, two loaves are offered as minchah offerings. Two lambs are brought together with them, as shelamim. The slaughtering of those lambs sanctify the loaves and permit them for consumption.] If the lambs were slaughtered with the intention that one of the loaves will be eaten the next day (beyond its prescribed time), or the spoons of levonah were burned with the intention that one of the arrangements of breads (six from the lechem hapanim) will be eaten the next day, Rabbi Yosi said: The loaf and the arrangement of breads that were thought about are piggul and they are subject to kares (if eaten). The other loaf or arrangement of breads are invalid, but are not subject to kares. The Sages maintain that both loaves and both arrangements are piggul and they are subject to kares. (13b)

One Thigh to the Other

Rav Huna said in the name of Rabbi Yosi: If one (during one of the services) had a piggul intention on the animal’s right thigh, the left thigh is not rendered piggul.

The reason for this can either be based upon logic, or alternatively, it can be based upon a Scriptural verse. The logic is as follows: An improper piggul thought cannot be better than an act of tumah; if one limb of a korban would become tamei, would the entire korban become tamei?! [It certainly would not!] So too regarding piggul: One thigh is rendered piggul, but not the other.] Alternatively, it is written: and the person that eats from it shall bear his sin. The verse says, from it, which implies, “not from its friend (the other limb).”

Rav Nachman asked Rav Huna from the following braisa (which is discussing the two loaves offered on Shavuos): They are never subject to kares unless there was a piggul intent regarding both of them – at least the amount of an olive (from both of them). [If he intended to eat from one of them, the second one is not rendered piggul. If he intended to eat a k’zayis from both of them together, they both are rendered piggul.] We can imply from the braisa that if he intended to eat from only one of them, the second one is not rendered piggul. Now, who is this going according to? It cannot be the Sages, for they maintain that piggul is effective even if he intends to eat from only one of them. Evidently, it is in accordance with Rabbi Yosi. Now, if he would hold that an animal (both limbs) is regarded as one (with respect to piggul), it is understandable why the two loaves can combine (in the case when he intends to eat a k’zayis from the two loaves – for he mentally combined the two) for piggul; however, if he would hold that the animal (both limbs) is regarded as two (with respect to piggul), how can the two loaves combine?

The Gemora answers: It is following the opinion of Rebbe, for it was taught in a braisa: If one of the lambs was slaughtered with the intention that half a k’zayis of one loaf will be eaten the next day (beyond its prescribed time), and the other lamb was slaughtered with the intention that half a k’zayis of the other loaf will be eaten the next day, Rebbe says: I say that it is valid. We can imply from the braisa that it is only because he specified “half of this one” and “half of the other”; however, if he would have intended to eat a k’zayis from both of them, they would combine (for piggul, for he has mentally connected the two loaves).

The Gemora asks: Now, who is Rebbe going according to? It cannot be the Sages, for they maintain that piggul is effective even if he intends to eat from only one of them. And if it is in accordance with Rabbi Yosi, the question returns.

The Gemora answers: It must be that he is in accordance with the Sages, but do not read (in the braisa) unless he expressed an intention with “shteihen” (in female form – meaning “both the loaves”), but rather read it as follows: unless he expressed an intention with “shneihen” (in male form – meaning “both the lambs”); but even though the intention was only with respect to one of the loaves (it is piggul; this would be according to the Sages). The point of the braisa is to exclude the view of Rabbi Meir, who said that a piggul intention expressed during the service of half a permitter is effective; and the braisa teaches us that this is not so (and the piggul intention must be during the slaughtering of both lambs).

The Gemora asks: If so, why does the braisa use the expression “they are never subject to kares unless etc.” (which seems to indicate that there are two exclusions)? It would have been well if the braisa had meant that the piggul intention must be regarding both loaves and with both lambs, and it would be in accordance with Rabbi Yosi, and rejecting the opinions of Rabbi Meir (who maintains that a piggul intention can be effective with half a permitter – just one of the lambs), and that of the Sages (who hold that one of the loaves can be rendered piggul without the other); and that is why the braisa stated that “they are never subject to kares unless etc.” But if you merely say that the braisa is following the view of the Sages, rejecting only the view of Rabbi Meir, why then did the braisa use the expression “they are never subject to kares unless etc.”? [Accordingly, the braisa definitely reflects Rabbi Yosi’s viewpoint, and if Rav Huna is correct regarding the two thighs (that one will be rendered piggul but not the other), how can this braisa rule that a piggul intention of a k’zayis from the two loaves is effective?]

And furthermore, Rav Ashi asked on Rav Huna from the following braisa: Rebbe said in the name of Rabbi Yosi (regarding the bulls and the goats that were burned): If while performing a service outside (in the Courtyard) he expressed a piggul intention with respect to another service which is performed outside, the offering is rendered piggul. If, however, it was with respect to a service which is performed inside (in the Sanctuary), it is not piggul. The braisa explains: If while he was standing outside (in the Courtyard) he said, “Behold I am slaughtering with the intention of sprinkling the blood (in the Sanctuary) after its time,” it is not rendered piggul, for this is an intention expressed while serving outside regarding a service performed inside. Likewise, if while he was standing inside he said, “Behold I am sprinkling the blood with the intention of burning the sacrificial parts after its time,” or, “with the intention of pouring out the remnants of the blood after its time,” it is not rendered piggul, for this is an intention expressed while serving inside with respect to a service performed outside. If, however, while he was standing outside he said, “Behold I am slaughtering with the intention of pouring out the remnants of the blood after its time,” or, “with the intention of burning the sacrificial parts after its time,” it is rendered piggul, for this is an intention expressed while serving outside with respect to a service performed outside. Now, in the case where the intention was to pour out the remnants of the blood, what part of the offering is rendered piggul (and subject to kares if eaten)? It cannot mean that the blood becomes piggul, for it was taught in a Mishna: These are the things for which one is not liable (to kares) on account of piggul (for the following things do not have anything that permit them for consumption): The kometz, the levonah, the incense, the minchah offering of the Kohanim, the libations which are brought by themselves, the minchah offering of the anointed Kohen, and the blood! Obviously then it is the meat that becomes piggul. Now if in that case where no intention was expressed with regard to the meat at all, Rabbi Yosi holds that it nevertheless becomes piggul, how much more so in this case where he actually expressed an intention with regard to the meat of the offering, should we not say that when the intention was regarding the right thigh, the left thigh is rendered piggul as well!?

Furthermore, Ravina cited the following Mishna: If one performed a kemitzah on a minchah with the intention of eating its remainder on the next day, or with the intention of burning its komeitz on the next day, Rabbi Yosi admits regarding this that it is piggul and it is subject to kares. Now, in the case where the intention was to burn the komeitz, what part is rendered piggul?

It cannot mean that the blood becomes piggul, for it was taught in a Mishna: These are the things for which one is not liable (to kares) on account of piggul (for the following things do not have anything that permit them for consumption): The kometz, etc. Obviously then it is the remainder that becomes piggul. Now if in that case where no intention was expressed with regard to the remainder at all, Rabbi Yosi holds that it nevertheless becomes piggul, how much more so in this case where he actually expressed an intention with regard to the meat of the offering (should we not say that when the intention was regarding the right thigh, the left thigh is rendered piggul as well)!!?

Rather, Rabbi Yochanan said: This is the explanation for Rabbi Yosi: The Torah regards the two loaves as one unit, and the Torah also regards them as two units. It is one unit since one cannot be offered without the other; and it is two units since the Torah instructed us that each loaf shall be prepared separately. Therefore, if he combined them (in the case when he intended to eat a k'zayis from the two loaves – for he mentally combined the two), they are thereby united, since the Torah regards them as one unit; however, if he separated them (in the case where he had an intention regarding one of the loaves), they remain separated, since the Torah regards them also as two units.

Rabbi Yochanan inquired: What is the halachah if one expressed a piggul intention with respect to one of the type of loaves of the todah offerings? [Are the other types rendered piggul as well?] Likewise, what would be the halachah if he expressed a piggul intention with respect to one of the type of loaves of the baked minchah offering? [Is the other type rendered piggul as well?]

Rav Tachlifa of Eretz Yisroel taught the following braisa to him: And similarly (the dispute mentioned in the Mishna), by the loaves of the todah offering, and that of the baked minchah offering.

The Gemora cites a braisa: If during the slaughtering he intended to eat half an olive's volume of the meat after its prescribed time, and during the throwing of the blood he also intended to eat half an olive's volume of the meat after its prescribed time, the offering is rendered piggul, for the slaughtering and the throwing can be combined as one.

Some said that this applied only to the slaughtering and the throwing of the blood since they are both permitters, but not to the receiving and the bringing of the blood; whereas others said that if it (the combination) applied even to these services which are far apart from each other, it will certainly apply to those services which are near each other.

The Gemora asks from a braisa which Levi taught which states that the four services, i.e., slaughtering, throwing the blood, accepting it and bringing it to the altar, do not combine to effect piggul!?

Rava answered that one braisa is following Rebbe's opinion, and the other braisa is following the Sages. For it was taught in a braisa: If one of the lambs was slaughtered with the intention that half a k'zayis of one loaf will be eaten the next day (beyond its prescribed time), and the other lamb was slaughtered with the intention that half a k'zayis of the other loaf will be eaten the next day, Rebbe says: I say that it is valid.

Abaye asked him: Perhaps Rebbe said that they do not combine when the intent was by half a permitter and it was regarding half of the amount required for eating; however, when it was by an entire permitter and regarding half of the amount required for eating, he did not say that (and they do combine)!!?

Rava bar Rav Chanan asked Abaye: And if Rebbe maintains that when the thoughts may combine when they were by an entire permitter and regarding half of the amount required for eating, shouldn't he issue a decree that they should combine as well by the case where the thoughts were by half a permitter and it was regarding half of the amount required for eating!?! For we find that Rabbi Yosi issues such a decree, and the Sages as well! Rabbi Yosi decrees in the following Mishna: If he had an intention to burn the levonah beyond its time, Rabbi Yosi says that it is invalid, but it is not subject to kares. [Evidently, he decrees that this case is invalid to safeguard against the case where he intended to burn the komeitz beyond its time – where it is rendered piggul!] The Sages say that it is piggul, and it is subject to kares. The Sages also issue such a decree in the following case: If one had intention during the komeitz, but not the levonah, or during the levonah but not the komeitz, Rabbi Meir says that it is piggul, and it is subject to kares. The Sages say that it is not piggul until he has intentions during the entire permitter. [They do, however, agree that the offering is invalid, and cannot be eaten.]

He replied: There is no comparison between the cases. The decrees you mentioned are understandable for the following reasons: Rabbi Yosi rules that the minchah is invalid in the case where the piggul intention was with respect to the komeitz of levonah as a safeguard against the case where the piggul intention was with respect to the komeitz of the minchah; and also that the Sages ruled that the minchah is invalid in the case where the piggul intention was during the burning of the komeitz (and not of the levonah) as a safeguard against the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the burning of the komeitz of the sinner's minchah (which has no levonah); and that they ruled that the (standard) minchah is invalid in the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the burning of the levonah (and not of the komeitz) as a safeguard against the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the burning of the spoons of levonah (by the lechem hapanim, where there is no other permitter); and in the case of the lambs too, they ruled that the loaves are invalid in the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the slaughtering of one lamb as a safeguard against the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the slaughtering of the other lamb as well; and they ruled that the lechem hapanim is invalid in the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the burning of one spoon of levonah as a safeguard against the case where the piggul intention was expressed during the burning of the other spoon as well! In our case (where during the slaughter of one of the lambs he had a piggul intention regarding half of a k'zayis), however, is there ever a case of a piggul intention expressed during the service of half a permitter regarding half of the amount required for eating that renders piggul, so that we should stand up and issue a decree here!? [This is why he rules that it is valid!] (13b – 14b)

DAILY MASHAL

Rebbe – “I Say”

Rebbe says: I say that it is valid.

Many times in Shas, it is found that Rebbe used this terminology, “I say etc.” What was his intention with these words?

Reb Yosef Engel in Beis Haotzar explains that it is known that Rebbe was a tremendously humble person. The Gemora in Sotah (49a) states that when Rebbe died, humility ceased. Perhaps what Rebbe was saying was that it appears to him that the halachah is like this-and-this, but not that it is most definitely so.

He also writes that it is clear from the seforim of the students of the Baal Shem Tov that lofty people are constantly thinking that their words and actions are not emanating from their own power and strength; rather, it is all coming from the Ribbono shel Olam. In kabbalah, the Shechinah is referred to as “Ani,” “I.” This is the explanation in the Gemora Sukkah (53a) when Hillel said, “If I am here, then everyone is here.” The “I” did not refer to himself, for Hillel, we also know was extremely humble. Rather, he was referring to the Shechinah. This, perhaps, is what Rebbe was saying when he said, “I say.” The Shechinah which is inside of me is saying that the halachah is like this.
