Refusing Yibum

Rav Tuvi bar Kisma said in the name of Shmuel: We write a certificate of rebelliousness against an arusah (who refuses to enter into nisuin after the time allotted for her), but we do not write a certificate of rebelliousness against a yevamah (who refuses to enter into yibum).

The Gemora asks from the following Baraisa: Both a woman who is betrothed and married, even if she is a niddah, even if she is sick, and even if she is waiting yibum; all can be regarded as rebelling. (Evidently, we would write a certificate for a yevamah awaiting yibum if she refuses)!

The Gemora answers: It is not difficult; the Baraisa is referring to a case where the yavam is demanding that the yevamah should avail herself to him, whereas Shmuel is discussing a case where she is demanding of him. For Rav Tachlifa bar Avimi said in the name of Shmuel: Beis Din gets involved to help the yavam when he demands of her and she refuses; however, they do not get involved to help her when she demands of him and he refuses.

The Gemora asks: If Shmuel is referring to a case where she demands of him and he refuses, he should have said: We write a certificate of rebelliousness for an arusah (not against the arusah)?

The Gemora answers: It is not difficult; let us emend Shmuel’s statement to read: We write a certificate of rebelliousness for an arusah.

The Gemora asks: Why is it different that we don’t write a certificate of rebelliousness against the yavam? It must be because we tell the yevamah, “Go, you are not obligated to have children!” Shouldn’t the same logic apply by an arusah also? When she is demanding to be married with nisuin, we should tell her, “Go, you are not obligated to have children!”

Perhaps you will say that it is referring to a case where the arusah is coming with a valid claim, saying, “I wish to have a staff in my hand and a spade for my burial (a son who will provide for me while I am alive and arrange for my burial when I die).” If so, the same claim can be said by a yevamah as well; why is the arusah’s claim any stronger?

Rather, the Gemora reverts to its original understanding: Both the Baraisa and Shmuel are discussing a case where the yavam is demanding of the yevamah; the difference is as follows: The Baraisa is referring to a case where the yavam is demanding that the yevamah should submit to chalitzah (we write a certificate of rebelliousness against her because chalitzah is regarded as the preferred option). Shmuel is discussing a case where the yavam is demanding that yibum should be performed (we do not write a certificate of rebelliousness against her). For Rabbi Pedas said in the name of Rabbi Yochanan: Beis Din gets involved to help the yavam when he demands that the yevamah should submit to chalitzah; however, they do not get involved to help her when he demands yibum.

The Gemora asks on this explanation: Why is it different that we don’t write a certificate of rebelliousness against the yevamah when she refuses yibum? It must be because we tell the yavam, “Go and marry a different woman.” Shouldn’t we be able to say the same thing when his yevamah refuses to submit to chalitzah?

Perhaps you will say that the yavam can counter and say, "Since the yevamah is attached to me, another woman will not want to marry me," and therefore, the Baraisa rules that Beis Din assists him. If so, we can say the same argument in Shmuel's case, when she refuses yibum. Why should the two cases be different?

Rather, the Gemora explains that both the Baraisa and Shmuel are discussing a case where the yavam is demanding of the yevamah to avail herself for yibum; the difference is as follows: The Baraisa is following the opinion of the original Mishnah (the mitzvah of yibum is more preferable than chalitzah; and therefore, the yevamah is regarded as rebellious if she refuses yibum). Shmuel is following the opinion of the later Mishnah (the mitzvah of chalitzah is more preferable than yibum; and therefore, the yevamah is not regarded as rebellious if she refuses yibum). For we learned in the following Mishnah: The mitzvah of yibum takes precedence over the mitzvah of chalitzah. This was only initially, when the people intended solely for the sake of the mitzvah, but now that they have ulterior motives involved, the mitzvah of chalitzah takes precedence. (64a1 – 64a3)

Compensation for Rebellion

The Mishnah had stated: One who rebels against his wife must add three dinar a week to her kesuvah. Rabbi Yehuda says: Three trapaics.

The Gemora asks: What are trapaics?

Rav Sheishes said: A trapaic is equivalent to an astira (a provincial sela).

The Gemora asks: And how much is an astira?

The Gemora answers: It is half a (Tyrian) zuz (the Tyrian coins were made out of pure silver, whereas, the provincial coins had only one part silver and seven parts were made from base metal; hence, the Tyrian coins were valued at eight times more than a provincial coin; there are four zuz (or dinars) in a sela and consequently, a provincial sela is equivalent to half of a Tyrian zuz).

The Gemora cites a Baraisa, which supports this explanation: Rabbi Yehudah said: Three trapaics (per week), which are equivalent to nine ma'ahs (since there are six ma'ahs in a zuz and a trapaic is half a zuz; three trapaics are equivalent to nine ma'ahs), which amounts to (a reduction) of a ma'ah and a half per day (six days of the week).

(It emerges from this Baraisa that when we increase her kesuvah on account of his rebelliousness, we do not include Shabbos.) Rav Chiya bar Yosef asked of Shmuel: Why is it that when we decrease her kesuvah on account of her rebelliousness, we include Shabbos (as Rabbi Yehudah stated: Seven dinars per week; one dinar per day), and yet, when we increase her kesuvah on account of his rebelliousness, we do not include Shabbos?

Shmuel answers: When we decrease her kesuvah on account of her rebellion, it does not have the appearance of "Shabbos pay"; however, where we are increasing his kesuvah on account of his rebellion (if we would include Shabbos), it would appear as "Shabbos pay." (It is Rabbinically forbidden to earn money on Shabbos, for this may result in buying, selling and renting on Shabbos.)

Rav Chiya bar Yosef asked of Shmuel: Why is that a rebellious woman loses more than a rebellious man?

Shmuel replied: Go out and learn from a market of harlots; who hires whom? (Since the man hires the woman, it is obvious that his desire for intimacy is greater, and the lack of intimacy causes more anguish to him than to her.) Another explanation: The man's desires are recognizable on the outside (his erection and therefore, he is more embarrassed), whereas a woman's is on the inside. (64a3 – 64b1)

Mishnah

The Mishnah states: If a man provides for his wife through a third party, he may not give her less than two kavs of wheat, or four kavs of barley per week. Rabbi Yosi said: Barley was granted to her only by Rabbi Yishmael, who was close to Edom. He also gives her half a kav of beans, a half a log of oil, and a kav of dried figs, or a maneh of pressed figs. And if he has none, he must provide in their stead produce from another place.

He must provide for her a bed, a mattress, and a mat. And he must give her a kerchief for her head, and a belt for her loins, and shoes from festival to festival, and clothing of fifty zuz from year to year. And he does not give her, either new clothes in the summer, worn-out in the winter, but he gives her new clothes worth fifty zuz in the winter, and she covers herself in their worn condition in the summer, and the worn-out ones are hers.

The Mishnah continues: He gives her a ma'ah of silver for her needs, and she eats with him on Friday nights. And if he does not give her a ma'ah of silver for her needs, her earnings are hers.

And what work must she do for him? She is required to spin the weight of five selas of warp in Judea, which equals ten selas in the Galil; or the weight of ten selas of weft in Judea, which are twenty selas in the Galil. But if she was nursing, they decrease her earnings obligation and increase her maintenance. To what does this refer? These minimums are applicable to a poor person in Israel. But with a wealthy person, everything is according to his honor. (64b1 – 64b2)

Amount of Meals

The Gemora asks: Who is the Tanna of our Mishnah (that we give the wife two kavs of wheat per week)? It cannot be Rabbi Yochanan ben Berokah, nor can it be Rabbi Shimon. For we learned in the following Mishnah: What is the quantity needed to make an eruv techumin (one who places a certain amount of food in a place up to 2,000 amos away from his current location; he is then permitted to walk 2,000 amos beyond there because the location of his food is regarded as his residence)? Food of two meals for each person that needs the eruv. This is referring to food for a weekday meal, and not for Shabbos meals; these are the words of Rabbi Meir. Rabbi Yehudah says: This is referring to food for Shabbos meals, and not for his weekday meals. Both opinions intended to be lenient (Rabbi Meir used to consume at a weekday meal less bread than at a Shabbos meal, which had more courses and since he ate bread with each course, he ate more bread; Rabbi Yehudah, however, consumed on Shabbos less bread than he would on weekdays because he satisfied himself with the extra courses). Rabbi Yochanan ben Beroka says: The required amount of bread for an eruv is a loaf that is purchased for a pundyon when four se'ahs of grain are purchased for a sela. (Each sela = four dinars, each dinar = six ma'ahs and each ma'ah = two pundyons. Consequently, a sela = (4 X 6 X 2) forty eight pundyons. Since a se'ah = six kavs, four se'ahs = twenty-four kavs. If four se'ahs (twenty-four kavs) sell for a sela (forty-eight pundyons), one can purchase one kav with two pundyons and a half of a kav with one pundyon; it emerges that the loaf of bread measures a volume of twelve eggs since there are twenty-four eggs in a kav.) Rabbi Shimon says: The required amount of bread for an eruv is two thirds of a loaf when there are three loaves to a kav. (One loaf is made from 1/3 kav, the volume of 8 eggs, and 2/3 of a loaf measures 5 1/3 eggs.) Half of the loaf is used to determine if one's clothes have been contaminated when he entered a house with tzaraas. (A person who enters a house inflicted with tzaraas becomes tamei immediately, but he is not required to wash his clothes unless he remained in it the time necessary for eating. The Sages learned from this that only if a person stayed in the house a length of time needed for eating, is required to wash his clothes. And the time is long enough "to eat a peras", i.e., 1/2 a loaf. The Mishnah teaches us that according to Rabbi Yochanan ben Berokah, who holds that a whole loaf is $\frac{1}{4}$ a kav [the volume of 6 eggs], the volume of the “eating of a peras” is 3 eggs; and according to Rabbi Shimon, who holds that a loaf is a $\frac{1}{3}$ of a kav [8 eggs], the volume of the “eating of a peras” is 4 eggs.) And a half of its half (a quarter of the loaf) is the amount of tamei food eaten that will render someone unfit to eat terumah. And a half of a half of a half of the loaf is the amount required to contract food tumah.

Now, the Gemora explains its question: Who is the Tanna of our Mishnah (that we give the wife two kavs of wheat per week)? If it is Rabbi Yochanan ben Berokah (who maintains that the two meals for an eruv measures half a kav), then two kavs of wheat will be only eight meals (and she needs fourteen for the week)? If it is Rabbi Shimon (who maintains that the two meals for an eruv measures two thirds of a one third kav loaf, then one meal is one ninth of a kav), then two kavs of wheat will be eighteen meals (which would be more than necessary)?

The Gemora answers: The Tanna of the Mishnah can be Rabbi Yochanan ben Berokah, and it is like Rav Chisda said elsewhere: Deduct a third for the profit of the shopkeeper, so too here also, take a third (though the shopkeeper buys at the rate of four se'ahs for a sela, which is equal to half a kav for a pundyon, he sells it at a higher price, leaving for himself a profit of one third of the purchase price; for each pundyon, he sells only two thirds of half a kav; one third of half a kav or one sixth of a kav thus provides one meal, two kavs therefore, would produce $(2 \times 6) =$ twelve meals) and add it (the four meals) to the eight meals that we calculated before.

The Gemora asks: That is still only twelve meals (and she needs fourteen meals)?

The Gemora answers: Since she eats with her husband on Friday night, it is not necessary to provide for that meal.

The Gemora asks: Firstly, this is only understandable according to the opinion who holds that the Mishnah means that she actually eats together with him, but according to the opinion who maintains that “eating” is merely a euphemism for marital relations, how can it be explained? Secondly, even without the Friday night meal, she still requires thirteen meals, and two kavs will only provide twelve meals?

The Gemora answers: The Tanna of the Mishnah can be Rabbi Yochanan ben Berokah, and it is like a different statement that Rav Chisda said elsewhere: Deduct a half for the profit of the shopkeeper, so too here also, take a half and add it (the eight meals) to the eight meals that we calculated before.

The Gemora asks: The two statements of Rav Chisda contradict each other!?

The Gemora answers: It is not difficult; one statement refers to a place where the wheat sellers supply wood to the bakers, whereas the other refers to a place where they do not supply the wood (and the shopkeeper sells at a profit equal to half of his purchase price to compensate himself for the cost of the wood).

The Gemora asks: Even according to this explanation, two kavs of wheat will provide sixteen meals and she needs only fourteen? This would be according to who? Can it be Rav Chidka, who says that one is obligated to eat four meals on Shabbos (and consequently, she needs sixteen meals a week)?

The Gemora answers that it can be according to the Rabbis who hold that one is required to eat only three meals on Shabbos, but one meal is reserved for guests and occasional visitors.

The Gemora concludes: Now that we explained the Mishnah in this way, we can say that our Mishnah follows the opinion of Rabbi Shimon. That which we asked that according to him, two kavs provide for eighteen meals, we can answer that we deduct meals, which are reserved for guests and occasional visitors. (64b2 – 64b5)

The Mishnah had stated: Rabbi Yosi said: Barley was granted to her [only by Rabbi Yishmael, who was close to Edom].

The Gemora asks: But is it in Edom only that they eat barley, and in the rest of the world, they do not eat barley?

The Gemora answers: this is what he was saying: Barley – that was double the amount of wheat – was granted to her only by Rabbi Yishmael, who was close to Edom. This is because barley from Edom is of very poor quality. (64b5)

INSIGHTS TO THE DAF

Yevamah's Mitzvah

The Gemora states that we don't write a certificate of rebelliousness against the yavam because we tell the yevamah, "Go, you are not obligated in this mitzvah!"

Rashi explains: The mitzvah to procreate obligates men, but not women.

The question can be asked: What about the mitzvah of yibum? Even if the woman is exempt from the commandment to procreate, but if she is obligated in the mitzvah of yibum, it should be regarded as the yavam is depriving the yevamah of her mitzvah. It is evident from our Gemora that the mitzvah of yibum is applicable only to the yavam, and not to the yevamah.

The Avudraham writes that the yevamah does not recite a blessing when she submits to chalitzah or yibum because she is exempt from the mitzvah of procreation. It seems that the two mitzvos are dependent upon each other; since she is not obligated to have children, she is exempt from the mitzvah of yibum.

The Rambam in his Sefer HaMitzvos (216) writes that there is a commandment for the yavam to perform a yibum with his brother's wife when his brother died childless.

The Minchas Chinuch (1:15) states that it is implicit from the Rambam that he maintains that the mitzvah of yibum is an obligation for the man (the yavam) and not for the woman (the yevamah).

The Chinuch (Mitzvah 598 and 599) states explicitly that the mitzvah of yibum is only applicable to men and not to women.

The Minchas Chinuch cites a Pnei Yehoshua in Kesuvos (40a) that the mitzvah of yibum also applies to the yevamah.

Why should there be an obligation for the yevamah; the Torah explicitly states that the brother should marry his brother's wife. It is not written anywhere that she shall be taken for yibum?

Reb Ezriel Cziment, in his sefer Mitzvos Hamelech answers: Besides the mitzvah of performing a yibum, there is also an obligation to establish a name for the deceased. It is this mitzvah that the yevamah plays an integral role in and she is thus included in the mitzvah obligation.

This would seemingly be inconsistent with our Gemora.

Who takes Precedence??

By: Reb Oizer Alpert

Yehudah requests that Yaakov send Binyomin down to Egypt with him and entrust him with ensuring Binyomin's safe return, so that there will be food to eat so that we (the brothers), you (our father), and our children shouldn't die of starvation. Rav Yaakov Kamenetzky derives a fascinating inference from the wording of our verse. He maintains that the Torah is prioritizing for us who has precedence when it comes to saving lives. We have a principle that saving one's own life comes before all others. However, in the unthinkable situation in which one may additionally save only one's father or one's own son, as occurred all too often during the Holocaust, who has precedence? Our Holy Torah, which contains the answer to every question, answers this one by mentioning the saving of their father Yaakov before that of their own children to teach us that one's father has priority.

It is interesting to note that Rav Elyashiv is quoted by his son-in-law Rav Yitzchok Zilberstein as opining that if one wishes to save his son in order to have somebody to take care of him in his old age and to eventually arrange his burial (see Kesuvos 64a), then he may save his son before his father. This is because the saving of his son is not just for his son's sake but also for his own, and we have a maxim that the expenses involved in honoring one's father are to be borne by one's father. In this case, were he to save his father's life instead of his son's, he wouldn't have his son to take care of him in his old age and it would come out that he saved his father on his own personal liability, something we don't obligate him to do.

Rav Zilberstein suggests that Rav Elyashiv and Rav Yaakov aren't disagreeing, but rather Rav Yaakov was interpreting the actions of the Shevatim, who did everything l'shem Shomayim (purely for the sake of Heaven) and not for any personal motivations, in which case everybody agrees that one's father comes first. He further points out that in saving Yaakov, they were also benefiting themselves as Yaakov's descent to Egypt brought about the end of the famine (Rashi 47:19) from which they personally were suffering.

DAILY MASHAL

SELECTIVE MEMORY

The Mishnah discusses the various amounts allotted for the poor, but regarding the wealthy, it is in accordance with his wealth. A lesson may be learned regarding what should be the focus of a person's life from the following story: The Meshulach from Novahrdok was well-known throughout Lithuania, tracing the same steps through the villages and cities for his collections. As he visited the home of R' Dovid

Friedman of Karlin, he marveled at the concentration and fervor of the elderly Gaon's learning. After several minutes, the Karliner noticed him standing there and asked who he was, and what he wanted. The Meshulach replied that he was collecting for the Novardok Yeshiva. R' Dovid reached into his pocket and gave the man some coins. The Meshulach continued to watch the Karliner learn, and after 10 minutes R' Dovid looked up and asked again who he was and what he wanted, handing over a few coins. When the same thing happened again, the Meshulach said he already received 2 donations from him, and just wanted to watch him learn. R' Dovid wept and apologized for his aging memory problems, adding that Boruch Hashem, he had not forgotten a single word of Torah for the last 50 years.
